Basques in the Americas
From 1492 to 1892:
A Chronology

FOREWORD

The Basques have been a successful minority for centuries, keeping their unique culture, physiology and language alive and distinct longer than any other Western European population. In addition, outside of the Basque homeland, their efforts in the development of the New World were instrumental in helping make the U.S., Mexico, Central and South America what they are today. Most history books, however, have generally referred to these early Basque adventurers either as Spanish or French. Rarely was the term “Basque” used to identify these pioneers. Recently, interested scholars have been much more definitive in their descriptions of the origins of these Argonauts. They have identified Basque fishermen, sailors, explorers, soldiers of fortune, settlers, clergymen, frontiersmen and politicians who were involved in the discovery and development of the Americas from before Columbus’ first voyage through colonization and beyond. This also includes generations of men and women of Basque descent born in these new lands.

As examples, we now know that the first map to ever show the Americas was drawn by a Basque and that the first Thanksgiving meal shared in what was to become the United States was actually done so by Basques 25 years before the Pilgrims. We also now recognize that many familiar cities and features in the New World were named by early Basques. These facts and others are shared on the following pages in a chronological review of some, but by no means all, of the involvement and accomplishments of Basques in the exploration, development and settlement of the Americas. While this paper deals primarily with what is now the Southwestern United States, Mexico, and Central America, Basques have made major contributions in South America, the Philippines, Eastern Canada and other areas of the world as well.

This paper includes the extraordinary and the mundane; the good and the bad. It is not intended to be a thorough history of Basques in the New World nor is it an exhaustive study of the topic. Rather, the names and events listed herein are an attempt to demonstrate this extensive Basque involvement and to stimulate the reader’s individual interest in the subject. As such, I have not footnoted or indexed the text. This will not please academia but it makes for greater ease in casual reading. The information was gleaned from the listed references.

I must thank my wife Judy and the entire Errea family, without whom this project would have never been undertaken. Judy’s paternal grandparents, Gualberto Errea and Manuela Etchenique came to California from Spain in 1910 and 1916, respectively. I must also thank four very important Colonial Basques scholars: Dr. William A. Douglass and Jon Bilbao for their exceptional ground-breaking work, Amerikanuak, and Donald T. Garate and Joxe Mallea-Olaetxe for their unselfish help to me on this continuing project. Lastly, this paper is dedicated to the thousands of Basque men and women who came to the U.S. in the last waves of immigration in the mid-Nineteenth Century and early to mid-Twentieth Century. Their fortitude, work ethic and assimilation into a new society and culture are both admirable and humbling.

According to Basque author Pierre Lhande, writing in 1909, “To be an authentic Basque, there are three requirements: To carry a sonorous name that indicates the origin; to speak the language of the sons of Aitor, and…to have an uncle in the Americas.” This paper is for all those uncles-and aunts.

INTRODUCTION

“Many say that the first to take on this harrowing adventure must have been fanatic-eccentrics and dare-devils. It would not have begun, they say, with reasonable Nordics, but only with the Basques, those giddy adventurers.”

-Jules Michelet, on whaling: La Mer, 1856

Archaeological evidence places Basque whalers and cod fishermen, giddy or not, in what is now Newfoundland, Canada before Columbus’ voyages. Since the Middle Ages, Basque seamen provide Europe with its whale oil and whalebone. When the treacherous waters of the Bay of Biscay are depleted of easy to catch whales and codfish, they turn their ships north towards Iceland and then southwest towards North America. These sailors intensively explore the eastern Canadian coast and parts of Iceland and start building whaling camps, probably before the year 1500. From 1500 to 1600 thousands of Basque whalers inhabit at least twelve Basque whaling villages during each five-month season along the North American coast. They make the 2,000 mile, one month trip to and from Europe, in fifty foot galleons that carry 50,000 gallons of whale oil. They hunt whales in twenty-five foot-long rowboats called txalupas.

In 1543, on his “Voyage of Discovery,” explorer Jacques Cartier is surprised to see a Basque fishing ship already anchored in a Labrador harbor he thought he was discovering. He also later notes the presence of one thousand Basque fishing vessels near the Gaspé Peninsula. Cartier and John Cabot, official discoverers of the St. Lawrence River and Terranova (Labrador and Newfoundland) actually just become formal claimants to lands already known for years by Basque fishermen and whalers. According to Mark Kurlansky, the Basques never claimed any of this land for anyone, wanting to keep these excellent fishing areas their secret.

The western part of Newfoundland was once known as Côte des Basques and present day Port-Aux-Basques is shown as early as 1612 on a map of eastern Canada drawn by Samuel de Champlain. Other Basque names are still in evidence. Among them are Garate’s Cove and Portuchoa, now called Port aux Choix. (The Canadian government, several universities and the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., continue on-going archaeological research at these ancient Basque whaling stations.)

In addition, historian Robert Delort of the University of Geneva has discovered evidence that New World fur trade may go back further than the whaling expeditions. Delort found British customs records indicating Basque traders landed heavy volumes of beaver pelts at English ports from 1380 to 1433. Because the pelts were delivered in rolls the way Quebec Indians stored them and because Northern European beaver populations were nearly extinct at that time, Delort speculates the source to be the New World.

On a related note, historian Tony Horwitz reports that in 1602 British explorer Bartholomew Gosnold landed his ship on the southern tip of Maine and was met by an Indian canoe rigged with a mast and sails. The English first mistook it for a European fishing vessel. Horwitz relates that one of the chroniclers of the trip reported that the Indians “…spake diverse Christian words and seemed to understand much more than we.” Horwitz states that they knew these words because they had been trading with Basque fishermen for years.
Basically, however, these early Basques are not interested in colonizing or settling this new land. Nor are they interested in converting the natives to Catholicism. They are simply interested in economic gain and are anxious to return to Europe with their pelts, whale products or codfish. The conquest, exploration, colonization and exploitation of the New World begins with Columbus and his sailings, starting in 1492.

BASQUES IN THE AMERICAS FROM 1492 TO 1892
(Basque names will be in bold print.)

Christopher Columbus
Not much is known of Christopher Columbus’ early life except that he was probably born in Genoa. However, his parents’ heritage is unknown. A question that has been posed is: Was Columbus Basque? Supporting this theory, Spanish historian Fernando del Valle Lersundi argues that Columbus was from Nafarroa and, at one time, fought as a Basque pirate for his uncle, Admiral Guillermo de Casenove. Lersundi states Casenove was a Basque pirate and was variously known as Colon, Coullon or Coulon. In the battle of Cape St. Vincent, near Lisbon in August 1476, del Valle relates that when Columbus was just 14 years old he fought in and with his uncle’s pirate fleet against Genoa under the name of Columbo Junior. In addition, in 1485 when Columbus’ wife dies, he spends the rest of his life with Basque Beatriz Enriquez de Arana, who is introduced to him by Diego de Arana. Diego is an officer on Columbus’ first voyage to the New World. Columbus and Beatriz never marry and have an illegitimate son, Fernando.

August 2, 1492 Columbus’ Voyage Number One (Three ships)
Columbus’ flagship, the Santa Maria (nicknamed “La Gallega”) is built in Basque shipyards and is the property of Bizkaian, Juan “Vizcaíno” Lacoza who is also its shipmaster. (Lacoza is also referred to as Lakota, Lakotza, LaCosa, Lakoza, De La Cosa and Juan Vizcaíno.) Among the other Basques on the Santa Maria are: Juan de Lequeitio, boatswain from Bizkaia; Martín de Urtubía, cabin boy from Natxitua, Bizkaia; Lope Aresti, caulker from Erandio, Bizkaia; Pérez Vizcaíno, cooper from Lekeitio, Bizkaia; Domingo de Anchiá, cooper from Ispazter, Bizkaia; Diego de Arana, mentioned earlier, who is expedition bailiff and of Basque origin from Córdoba; Domingo Vizcaíno; Juan de Urniga and Pedro de Bilbao. Among the Basques on the Niña are: Juan Ruiz de la Peña, from Bizkaia; Juan Martínez de Açogue, from Deba (Deva), Gipuzkoa; Pedro Arraes, from Deba, Juan Arraes (son of Pedro), also from Deba; Miguel de Soria and Pedro de Soria. Among the Basques on the Pinta are: Juan Quintero, from Algorta, Bizkaia; and Ojer de Berástegui, from Gipuzkoa.

(Professor Joxe Mallea-Olaetxe and Basque historian Donald Garate report that most Basque names are toponyms—taken from geographical locations. In addition, Garate contends that the additions of “de” and accent marks in Basque names are Castilian or Spanish additions. However, some New World Basques made the personal decision to add “de” to their names for the reason of prestige and/or to show nobility. For a complete explanation see Garate’s paper “Basque Names, Nobility and Ethnicity on the Spanish Frontier.”)
The Basques assert their unity early-on during this first voyage. Columbus told his crews that they would reach land within 750 leagues of the Canary Islands. When they hadn’t reached land at 800 leagues, the Basques on the Santa Maria threaten to throw him overboard. Only a quick meeting of the crews and officers of all three ships keep this from happening.

It should be noted here what Basque historian José Manuel Azcona Pastor says of the close-knit unity of the Basques; “[In the New World] the Basques participated willingly in all of the enterprises in which their presence was sought by the Spanish monarchy. They often acted collectively, as they represented an ethnic group and were seen as such by the Crown’s other settlers. They frequently used Euskara, their native language, to provide greater group strength and unity. Nevertheless, the observable clanlike spirit demonstrated by the Basques could camouflage the fact that they were often highly individualistic and competitive among themselves. Not infrequently, they resolutely defied the established powers through their leading roles in desertions, rebellions, mutinies, and various conspiracies…”

After making landfall October 11 in the Bahamas, Columbus’ crews replenish their supplies and continue sailing the Caribbean area. On December 25, 1492 the Santa Maria becomes shipwrecked off the coast of present day Haiti. The first Spanish-American establishment in the New World, La Navidad, is built with the remains of this Basque ship. (Columbus did not set out to “discover America.” In fact, Columbus never set foot on nor saw what is now America, or even North America. He set out to reach the Spice Islands by sailing directly west from Spain. Some historians call his discovery of the New World “history’s most magnificent accident.”)

As Columbus and Juan Lacoza return to Spain for provisions and additional men, thirty-nine of the crew (Including the remaining Bizkaians) stay behind at La Navidad under the command of Diego de Arana. (Apparently, Columbus intentionally ran the Santa Maria onto a sandbar. In order to claim new lands, the Spanish government required a settlement to be built on the new territory. In addition, he could not ask for volunteers to stay ashore while he returned to Spain. The “shipwreck” solved both problems.)

At the time of Columbus’ first voyage the native population of Mexico has been estimated to be seventeen million, two and one-half times greater than the population of Spain. There are another three million natives in the Caribbean Islands and more than five million in Central America. South America may hold an additional twenty-four million. That was all about to change.

September 25, 1493 Voyage Two (Sixteen ships)

Juan de Arbolancha and Iñigo de Artieta organize Columbus’ second voyage in Bizkaia. Juan Perez de Loyola, the older brother of the future Saint Ignatius, outfits one of the ships. Six Basque ships in a total of sixteen sail in July with many Basque crewmen. Juan Lacoza is master of the Marigalante and is chosen by Columbus to be his official cartographer. A total of 1,500 men make the trip. Among the other Basques on this second voyage are the following, several of which will play prominent roles in the development of the New World: Francisco de Garay, Sebastián de Olano, Juan Ortiz de Matienzo, Hernando de Guevara, Luis de Arteaga, Bartolomé Salcedo, Maiguel de Muncharaz, Luís de Lizarzu, Juan de Azúa, Pedro de Arana, Gabriel Butrón, Hernando de Berrio, Juan Ezquerra, Juan de Oñate, Diego de Arciaga, Pedro Vizcaíno, Juan de Barruti, Juan de Zamudio, Adrián de Múxica, Pedro Gámiz, Domingo de Escobar and Juan Ibarra de Ibañez.

As Columbus returns to the island of Hispaniola, his ships are loaded with all types of foodstuffs, seeds, plants and domestic animals including horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and chickens to maintain the colonies he expects to establish. Other organisms also make the voyage. They are in the soil, on the plants and inside and on the animals. These are all types of parasites, insects, seeds, worms, fungi and other new life forms not native to North and South America. These non-native organisms will be responsible for permanent, major changes in the ecosystems of the New World.

As an example of the other changes these European life forms will bring, there were no hogs in the New World. Columbus brought eight on this voyage to the island of Cuba. In twenty years there would be 30,000 hogs on Cuba, alone.

At the site of La Navidad all Columbus finds are burned ruins. The natives report that several of the 39 men he had left behind had killed each other in arguments and that the Indians had killed the remainder because of, among other things, the Europeans’ greed for gold and the native women.

On the other hand, when Columbus first lands in the Bahamas, these islands are home to as many as eighty thousand native people. Ten years later, the Bahamas are uninhabited; the people killed by disease or taken away to serve as slaves in Spain’s colonies in the New World. (Unfortunately, according to historian C. W. Ceram, Columbus becomes the first in a long line of slave hunters plying the outlying islands of the North American continent for human chattel.) By 1518, due to imported European diseases and difficult forced labor, captive Caribbean natives begin to die off in large numbers and the importation of African slaves begins. The Africans are less vulnerable to the European diseases.

For the Native Americans, European-introduced ailments such as diphtheria, trachoma, whooping cough, chickenpox, bubonic plague, typhoid fever, scarlet fever, amoebic dysentery, influenza and especially, smallpox and measles, are disastrous. Smallpox and measles attack the Indians in what one expert describes as, “possibly...the greatest demographic disaster in the history of the world.”

Historian David Weber asserts that, “…it may be that disease, the least visible trans-Atlantic baggage, was Spain’s most important weapon in the conquest of America.” The natives in the Caribbean Islands immediately feel the impact of these diseases, as they are unable to flee from them. The continental Indians have places to retreat to but waves of epidemics will sweep over them as well.

New forms of diseases from the Indians also find their way back to Europe. After Columbus returns to Spain, syphilis becomes the scourge of the Continent.

1496-Shortly after the first two voyages of Columbus, Pedro de Arbolancha, from Bilbao, becomes the major supplier and merchant to the New World.

1496- Santo Domingo is founded in what will become the Dominican Republic. It is founded by Bartholomew Columbus and is the oldest continuously inhabited European settlement in the Americas. Among the most significant Basques to settle early on are: Juan de Uruena, Cristóbal de Vergara, Pedro de Arana, Pedro Arriano and Diego de Ayala. Presently, the Dominican Republic bears several Basque place names. Among these are the province of Azua, with a capital of the same name, the province of Duarte, and the coastal town of Vizcaíno. In Puerto Rico there is a town named Añasco, the capital Loiza and the coastal city of Central Aguirre. An example in Panama is the important mid-canal town of Gamboa.

From Columbus’ second voyage on, as the Spaniards bring more and more horses to the New World, occasionally the ships carrying them would come to an area of calm winds that would dangerously prolong the voyage, usually at about 30 degrees Latitude. Water and food would have to be rationed. The horses are typically of poor stock and many will become sick and die. The crews have to throw so many of these horses overboard that the area becomes known as, and is still recognized as, “The Horse Latitudes.”

May 30, 1498 Columbus’ Voyage Three (Eight ships)
Among the Basques on this voyage are: Lope de Olano, Pedro de Araba, Pedro de Ledesma, Hernando de Guevara, Martín Arriarán, Bernardo de Ibarra, Juan Lacoza, Adrián de Múxica, Pedro Gámiz and Domingo de Escobar.
On this third voyage Columbus has to settle several serious disputes between his brother, Bartolomé--who he had left in charge on the island of Hispaniola after the second voyage--and unhappy colonists. Bizkaians Múxica, Gámiz and Escobar are among the Basques who revolt against the heavy-handed rule of the Columbus family. In addition, Gipuzkoan Hernando de Guevara marries an Indian princess in what is the first mixed marriage in the New World. Columbus’ alcalde mayor, Francisco Roldán, orders the marriage annulled. Guevara refuses and, led by Múxica, another revolt is started by the Basques.
This is Lacoza’s third and last voyage with Columbus to the Americas. (In all, La Cosa makes seven voyages to the New World.) On this trip, Columbus orders La Cosa to sign the Perez-Luna Agreement that states that Cuba is a continent. La Cosa is positive that this is not the case. Columbus remarks that, “Juan Lacoza thinks he knows more than I do in the art of navigating.” (Columbus never believed Cuba was an island.) In 1500 Columbus and his two brothers are arrested due to complaints from the colonists. They are taken to Spain in chains but all charges are dropped.

1498- Juan Lacoza is the first European to see South America and surely one of the first to set foot on it. The 1498 expedition also includes Americo Vespucci, for whom America is named, and Alonso de Ojeda. Eleven years later, Ojeda will be partly responsible for La Cosa’s death.

1499- Lacoza discovers the area of present day Venezuela.

1500- Lacoza continues to explore the Caribbean and draws the Carta de Marear o Mapamundi, the first map of the world to include the Americas. It is the only known map made by an actual participant on the first two voyages of Columbus that includes representations of Cuba (correctly shown as an island) Hispaniola and Puerto Rico.
Cosa’s maps are the most valued of any in his day as he has sailed more miles in the Caribbean than even Columbus.

1500- Vasco Nuñez de Balboa, the first European to see the eastern edge of the Pacific Ocean, is brought to the New World by Rodrigo de Bastidas and Juan Lacoza.

1501- Lacoza discovers and maps the coasts of present day Columbia and part of Panama.

1502-In January an expedition associated with Gipuzkoan merchant Jaun de Vergara consisting of four ships sets sail for the New World. Fellow Gipuzkoan Hernando de Guevara (who had married the Indian princess in 1498) captains one of the ships, the Santa Ana. In May they establish Santa Cruz, the first European colony on the South American continent, in what is now Columbia.

April 13, 1502 Columbus’ Fourth and Last Voyage (Four ships)
The ships are the Santa María, Capitana, Gallega and the Vizcaína. The Vizcaína is the property of Juan de Orquina of Getaria, Gipuzkoa, and has a Basque pilot. There are 140 men with Columbus on his final crossing. Of that number, just over 20 are Basque. Among the Basques are: Pedro de Ledesma, pilot; Martín de Fuenterrabía, boatswain; Martín de Arrieta, cooper; Domingo Vizcaínos, caulkier; Diego de Arana, caulkier; Martín Machín, carpenter; Pedro Moya, sailor; Martín de Atín, sailor and Gonzalo de Salazar, trumpeter. Of the Basques on the voyage, six will die during the trip before they reach Cuba as a result of the difficulties faced on these early sailings. This final voyage is a disaster for Columbus. He returns to Spain a broken man. Columbus dies on May 20, 1506.

1504- Juan de Esquivel is sent to Hispaniola leading 400 men to subjugate the Indians. He accomplishes this after much fighting and founds the town of Santa Cruz del Seybo.

1508- Juan Ponce de León conquers Puerto Rico. The earliest colonizers are Diego de Salazar, Miguel de Teso and Luis de Añasco. The first farmer is Juan Mejia Eguiluz.

1508- Two Spaniards are sent by the king of Spain to the New World to establish settlements on the coast of present day Columbia. One, Diego de Nicuesa, is wealthy and a member of the Spanish Court. Basque Lope de Olano accompanies him. The other, Alonso de Ojeda, doesn’t have the finances needed to fund his part of the expedition. He turns to Juan Lacoza who, besides being able to navigate the trip, has also accumulated a sizable fortune from gold taken from Indians in the area of Darien, Columbia. From the very onset there is competition, deceit, bad feelings and trouble between Nicuesa and Ojeda. In addition there is competition between Olano and Nicuesa. A duel is challenged between Ojeda and Nicuesa but Lacoza negotiates a truce. Lacoza must also establish a boundary in Columbia between these two warring Spaniards.

1509- Diego Columbus sends Juan de Esquivel, mentioned previously, with seventy men to take possession of Jamaica. He easily takes the island and founds a colony and seat of government where Christopher Columbus had been shipwrecked in 1503. Esquivel, with a moderate government, establishes the agriculture and livestock industries of the island and he supplied much of the provisions sent to the other Spanish colonies and islands. In his short time of rule he also established two new towns, Oristan and Melilla and saw to the construction of five ships. He dies in 1519.

1509- Alonso de Ojeda heads an expedition that includes Juan Lacoza and Francisco Pizarro, who later conquers the Incas, to the port of Calamar, Columbia. There, Ojeda and Pizarro, against the advice of La Cosa, decide to massacre all the natives in the area. In that fight, Lacoza, age 49, who had made such huge contributions to the exploration of the New World, is slain by poisoned Indian arrows while trying to cover Ojeda’s and Pizarro’s retreat. Despite their differences, Diego de Nicuesa comes to the aid of Ojeda so they can slaughter every man, woman and child in the tribe that killed Lacoza.

1509- During the activities listed above, Lope de Olano discovers the mouth of the Changres River in Panama. In this same time period, while searching for the mouth of the Veragua River, he allows his fleet to be destroyed on the rocks to discourage desertion. He later regrets his decision and orders the debris collected to build a ship to leave the area. This is probably the first ship built by Europeans in the New World.

1509- Pánfilo de Narváez, who becomes a noteworthy Basque conquistador in Mexico, is an officer under Juan de Esquivel in the conquest of Jamaica.

1510- Lope de Olano attempts to take over Diego de Nicuesa’s command by telling his men that Nicuesa is dead. Nicuesa reappears and tries to imprison Olano on Antigua. However, a relative of Olano, Basque Juan de Zamudio, is the Alcalde of Antigua. He releases Olano and forces Nicuesa and the few remaining men loyal to him onto Nicuesa’s most un-seaworthy ship and sends them off towards Hispaniola. The boat leaves Antigua in March of 1511 and is never seen again.

1510- Because of the abundance of pearls in the area of the Venezuelan coast, among the first to exploit the region are naval outfitters Sancho Ortiz de Urrutia, Juan de Urrutia and Domingo Zubizarreta. Also there at the time are Sancho de Lizarra, royal overseer Juan López de Arrechulueta, royal treasurer Martín de Ochandiano and friar Antonio de Bilbao.

1512- Pánfilo de Narváez, mentioned previously, is an officer under Diego de Velázquez in the conquest of Cuba.

1513- Juan Ponce de Leon and his Basque pilot Juan Pérez de Ortubia discover Florida and the Gulf Stream.

1513- Vasco Nuñez de Balboa, brought to the New World by Lacoza in 1500, hears of a great sea and much gold to the south, he crosses the Isthmus of Panama and finds the Pacific Ocean. Among the Basques important to the expedition are: Antonio de Baracaldo, Pedro de Orduña, Pedro de Arbolancha (the ship owner and merchant from Bilbao) and Pascual de Andagoya one of the future founders of Panama City and its first alderman. Other Basques along include Lorenzo de Galarza, Rodrigo de Motrico, Hernando de Celaya, Juan de Basurto, Pedro de Jaúregui, Juan de Castañeda, Diego de Esquivel, Juan de Avendaño, Martín de Cote and Rodrigo de Lazcano.

1514- Pánfilo de Narváez founds the city of Havana, Cuba.

1514- The Antilles Islands of the Caribbean become the center for the first Basque immigrants to the New World. At this time, Juan de Zamudio, mentioned before as the Alcalde of Antigua, is now governor of Hispaniola. Among the Basques in the Antilles at the time are: Juan de Azúa, Juan Vizcaíno, Pedro de Arana, Gabriel Butrón, Hernando de Barrio, Juan Ezquerra, Cristóbal Vizcaíno, Inés Machín, Juan de Bergara, Juan de Oñate, Diego de Arriaga, Pedro de Bergara, Juan de Barruti, Gonzalo Vizcaíno, Juan de Ochoa, Francisco de Barrena, Juan de Aguirre, Miguel de Bergara, Pedro Viscaino, Diego de Ayala and Juan de Urueba.

1515- Francisco de Garay, born in Sotopuerta, Bizkaia, is appointed Governor of Jamaica. (Garay accompanied Columbus on his second voyage to the New World in 1493.) Garay is related to Diego Columbus’ wife, María de Toledo, who is related to King Ferdinand. (Diego Columbus is Christopher Columbus’ oldest son.) A huge gold strike in 1502 near Santo Domingo, Española, where Garay finds a nugget worth thirty-six thousand pesos de oro, initiates’ his fortune. At one time he employs five thousand Indians to tend his livestock and farms. However, his indebtedness to Genoese bankers and his thirst for additional wealth and power to satisfy these bankers eventually leads to his financial demise. His need for power and wealth will eventually lead to his premature death. (More than 300 Basques become governors in the New World. Most are listed in Appendix Three at the end of this Chronology.)

1515- A Bizkaian, Bono de Quexo is the first explorer of the island of Trinidad. While there he captures a large number of natives he later sells as slaves on the island of San Juan. Other explorers of the region are Captains Vasconia and Hernando de Beteta.

1517- Diego de Velázquez, governor of Cuba, sends two ships owned by Bizkaian Lope Ochoa de Salcedo to explore the Yucatán peninsula. They sail along the Yucatán and Gulf of Mexico for 6 months collecting gold worth over twenty thousand pesos and encounter a wide variety of cultures and lands proving it is a major land mass and not another island. This expedition provides the emphasis for Hernán Cortéz to mount his quest to find as much gold as possible for the Crown. The Cortez expedition turns out to be the conquest of the mainland of Mexico. Many Basques are with Cortéz in his army and navy and become administrators after the conquest. (See pages 34 and 35 in Possible Paradises.)

1517- 1527- Fray Alonso de Zuazo, judge of Santo Domingo, is noted for his protection of the native Indians, as are padres Pedro de Rentería and Francisco Marroquíñ.
1518- The Lande family from Bayonne is involved in transoceanic trade with the east coast of Canada.

1519- Francisco de Garay, mentioned before, outfits four ships for the exploration of the Gulf Coast with Alonzo Álvarez de Pineda in command. Garay sends Pineda towards Florida to search for new lands and map the coast of the Gulf of Mexico. Pineda’s maps are the first ever made of this coastline. However, Garay faces major competition for new conquests from Francisco Hernández de Córdoba, Juan de Grijalva and Hernán Cortéz.

Pineda reports back to Garay and then immediately returns to the Río Pánuco. This time, Huastec Indians kill “all the horses and soldiers” in the expedition. Álvarez de Pineda’s skin is peeled from his body and hung up and displayed as a trophy. Later, Garay sails to the Río Pánuco to reestablish his settlement but he finds Cortéz’s men have already taken control of the area and founded a town called Santiesteban del Puerto, present day Pánuco, Vera Cruz. Garay’s men desert him and Cortéz’s influence is too strong for Garay. Finally, he goes to Mexico City to meet with Cortéz. Cortéz is extremely hospitable as he negotiates with Garay for colonization rights on the Río de Las Palmas, which is the present day Soto la Marina River, 150 miles south of the Río Grande. An agreement is reached and the two attend Christmas Eve Mass together. Very suddenly thereafter, Garay becomes ill and dies on December 27, 1523. Officially, the cause of death is pneumonia. However, there is great suspicion that Cortéz used the occasion to poison Francisco de Garay “with pudding and bread.”

1519- Pascual de Andagoya founds the capital of Panama. Later he discovers the route into Peru that Francisco Pizarro follows on his conquest of the Inca.

From the discovery of the New World until 1539 the Basque percentage of the European population in Mexico and the Indies has been estimated at approximately 4.5%. However, for the same period of time, Basques accounted for 14% of all the merchants, (the highest percentage of all the groups from Europe); 17.2% of all mariners; 8.8% of all miners; 8.5% of all high-level administrators and 4.8% of all clergymen. There was not a major expedition, religious, commercial or administrative structure that did not contain Basques in numbers out of proportion to the other Europeans in the Americas.

1519-1520- A significant number of Basques are among the troops led by Cortéz and Pánfilo de Narváez in their conquest of Mexico. Indeed, according to historian Jose Pastor, with the exceptions of the Extremadurans and Andalusians, no other group of colonists with Cortéz is as numerous as the Basques.

Among the Basques who took part in the conquest of Mexico with Cortéz and Narváez are the following: Juan Arguena, Martín López, Pedro de Anaya, Antón de Arizabal, Juan de Arriaga, Juan Pérez de Arteaga, Pedro de Berrio, Sebastián de Zubieta, Pedro de Carranza, Andrés de Eibar, Juan de Fuenterrabia, Cristóbal Martín de Gamboa, Diego de Arísnea, Heredia el Viejo, Martín de Ircio, Pedro de Ircio, Hernando de Lezama, Martín Ruíz de Monjaraz, Gregorio de Monjaraz, Juan de Montano, Juan de Lizana, Rodrigo Guipúzcoano, Martín Ramos, Juan Espinosa, Pedro de Orduña, Alonso de Motrico, Diego de Olarte Gonzalo de Ochoa, Diego de Sopuerta, Andrés del Arnés de Sopuerta, Juan de San Sebastián, Pedro de Uribeta, Juan Ruiz de Viana, Alonso de Zuazo, Juan de Guetaria, Romos Martín, Juan de Aguirre, Hernando de Argüeta, Miguel Arriaga, Domingo de Arteaga, Juan de Azpeitia, Juan Díaz de Azpeitia, Francisco de Berrio, Hernando de Elgueta, Gaspar de Guernica, Diego de Guinea, Juan de Guevara, Juan Bono de Guecho, Juan de Vizcaíno, Guillén de Laloa, Hernando de Lezama, Juan de Lezcano, Diego de Mortrico, Francisco Martín, Juan de Ochoa de Lexalde, Diego de Ordez, Diego de Orduña, Francisco de Orduña, Francisco de Orozco, Ochoa de Verazu, Alonso de Orduña, Juan de Orozco Melgar, Diego de Olarte, Ochoa de Asúa, Juan de Ochoa, Martín de San Juan, Juan de Susmiaga, Antonio de Sánchez, Santiago Vizcaíno, Anton de Torraeta, Gonzalo de Urriola, Juan de Ugarte de la Cruz, Pedro Vizcaíno, Alonso de Vergara, Juan de Vergara, Pedro de Vergara, Martín de Vergara, Miguel de Veraza, Juan de Zamudio (with Cortéz), Juan de Zamudio (with Narváez) and Juan de Zubia.

The previous list does not include the sailors under the command of Cortéz. These include: Martín López, Juan de Bilbao, Juan Martínez de Aroa, Juanes de Zuaxo, Juanes de Marquina, Miguel de Uribeta, Juan de Balzolo, Pedro de Ochoa, Juan de Escarza, Juanes de Arrieta, Martín de Aspirunta, Domingo de Elejalde, Martín Pérez de Lezcano and Ortuño Jimenez.

(Historian Michael B. A. Oldstone asserts that the successful conquest of the Aztec in Mexico and the Inca in Peru resulted mainly from epidemics of smallpox and measles that the natives had no immunity for. Oldstone relates that once the Aztecs were induced to fight, they savagely attacked and defeated the Spanish. However, on the same night that they drove the Spanish from Mexico City, a smallpox epidemic began. The Indians died by the thousands and they interpreted the death of their people, while the Spaniards were unaffected, as an indication that the Christian god was superior to their native gods. Therefore, a second and more lasting effect of the epidemic was the destruction of native cultures as millions of Indians were converted to the Christian faith.

1520- After the conquest of Mexico, Pánfilo de Narváez is sent by the governor of Cuba, Diego de Velázquez, in an effort to overthrow Velázquez’s rival, Hernán Cortéz. Narváez is defeated. He loses an eye in battle and is imprisoned for two years before he returns to Spain.

During that takeover attempt, a member of Narváez’s army introduces smallpox into Mexico. It is the first of a number of devastating epidemics to strike the natives of the New World. During the time of the Spanish conquest of the New World it has been estimated that more than one-third of the total native population was killed by smallpox. The same virus continued to kill the people of Mexico at the rate of over 10,000 per year until the 1940’s when smallpox was eradicated. A partial listing of these epidemics appears in Appendix Eight.

Language is a unifying factor for the Basques, especially in New Spain. According to Joxe Mallea-Olaetxe: “In 1521, when Hernán Cortés tried to explain to Moctezuma the nature of the party of Spaniards under Pánfilo de Narváez, he told him they were Vizcaínos (Castile had many Biscayan immigrants, so all Basques were called Viscainos) and added, ‘They speak like the Otomies.’ Language was the first thing that came to Cortés’ mind about the Basques, and he communicated its barbarities to Moctezuma by equating it to that of the Otomí, a savage people whom the Aztecs held in contempt.”) Emphasis added.

1520- Cortéz names Pedro de Ircio, from Enkarterri, the mayor of Tepeaca, Mexico.

1520- The interest in whaling along the Canadian coast is maintained as Basques from Iparralde continue in the venture. Pierre de Lhande seeks permission from the Council of Bayonne to search the area for cod and whales. In 1521 Michel de Segure and Mathieu de Biran also seek the same permits.

1520 to 1580- Fully 80% of the ships making voyages between Europe and the Americas are either Basque-manned and/or owned by Basque commercial interests. Between 1580 and 1610, 50% of the ships and commerce is Basque controlled. In these formative stages of New World trade, Basques dominate Colonial shipping enterprises for nearly 100 years. Historian David Goodman states, “Basque seamen were widely held to be the best in Spain.”

In addition, three organizations in Spain control trade and commerce to the New World. These are the Council of the Indies, the House of Trade and the Corporation of Indies’ Shippers. A disproportionately high number of the main offices of these organizations are filled by Basques. Among these leaders are: Domingo Ochandiano, Andrés Munibe, José de Veitia Linaje, and Francisco Alberro (all treasurers); Martín de Oña, Bernabé de Otálora, Pedro Uribe, Manuel de Murguía, and Alberto de Isasi (all chief justices); and Bernardo Díaz de Argandoña, the most powerful district attorney of the office.

The power of these men and their offices is so great that in 1593 they are able to convince King Philip II to prohibit ships built in Sevilla, Cádiz, Puerto de Santa María and Huelva from forming part of the convoys to the New World. Only Basque ships could sail.

(In this age of exploration and colonization, the coast of the Basque Country held Spain’s principal shipbuilding sites and recruitment areas for sailors. In Bizkaia there were the villages of Zorroza, Deusto, Portugalete, Bermeo and Lequeitio. In Gipuzkoa there was Lezo, Pasajes, Usúrbil, Deva, Orio and Rentería. Bizkaia and Gipuzkoa also produced valuable oak trees used in ship construction. In addition, Nafarroa produced iron cannon balls, gunpowder and matches and hemp for naval ropes. Most of the ships built in Spain’s Golden Era were Basque built. As an example, of the 47 ships built in Spain between 1615 and 1682, all were built in Basque shipyards and Basque master shipbuilders built all but 4 of the ships. [Ships from St-Jean-de-Luz were used as well but were registered with authorities as from Bizkaia.] A great number of the administrators, officers and crewmen of these ships were also Basques and, in many instances, followed in a line of three or more generations of builders or mariners.)

Magellan’s Attempt to Sail Around the World
1518- Ferdinand Magellan, from Portugal, appeals to Charles V of Spain to open a new route to the Spice Islands following the coast of South America. The Emperor agrees, probably influenced by the advice of Magellan’s companions on his Royal visit, Sancho de Matienzo, the treasurer of the House of Trade, and Domingo de Ochandiano, the contractor of the expedition, both Bizkaians.

1521- Basques play an important part in the Magellan expedition. The preparation for the monumental voyage is handled by Basque Nicolás de Artieta. Five ships began the trip and Basques are the masters of three of them. The five ships are the flagship Trinidad, bought in Bilbao, the San Antonio, Concepción, Santiago and Victoria, which is built in Zarautz. Thirty-six Basques are among the crew of 265 men. The Basque members of the expedition are: Domingo de Urrutia, from Lekeitio, Master of the Trinidad; Juan Sebastián Elcano, from Guetaria, Master of the Concepción; Juan de Elorriaga, from Deba, Master of the San Antonio; Sebastián de Olarte, Bilbao; Pedro de Olarte, Portugalete; Lope de Ugarte, Segura; Juan de Segura, Segura; Lorenzo de Iruña, Sorabilla; Juan de Aguirre, Bermeo; Juan de Acurio, Bermeo; Martín de Aguirre, Irun; Juan de Irún Uranzu, Irun; Pedro Mugartegui, Bermeo; Juanico el Vizcaíno, Bizkaia; Martín de Inchaurreaga, Bermeo; Juan de Arratia, Bilbao; Pedro de Tolosa, Tolosa; Juan de Orue, Mungia; Pedro de Basozabal, Mungia; Juan Navarro, Pamplona; Ochoa de Erandio, Erandio; Pedro de Bilbao, Bilbao; Martín de Goytisolo, Bakio; Antonio de Basozabal, Bermeo; Domingo de Icaza, Deba; Pedro Sautua, Bermeo; Martín Garate, Deba; Juan de Menchaca, Bilbao; Pedro de Chindurza, Bermeo; Juan de Zubileta, Barakaldo; Juan Ortiz de Gopegui, Bilbao; León de Ezpeleta, Bilbao; Diego de Peralta, Peralta; Pedro de Olabarrieta, Galdakao; Martín de Barrena, Orio and Lope Navarro, Tudela.

Only 3 ships reach the Philippines after two are lost sailing around the rugged southern tip of South America. After attempts to impart Christianity onto the natives, the Europeans are attacked and Magellan is killed. The explorers burn the Concepción due to losses of crewmembers and Basque Juan Sebastián Elcano (or del Cano) assumes command of the Victoria and the expedition. He is also named treasurer of the remaining group.

On September 6, 1522, almost three years after it had set off, the Victoria returns to Sanlúcar de Barrameda barely afloat. It traveled almost 42,000 miles and only eighteen of the original crew of 265 men successfully completed the first circumnavigation of the earth. In addition to Elcano, three other Basques live through the adventure: Juan de Acurio, Juan de Arratia and Juan de Zubileta. Naval historian David Goodman calls Elcano’s voyage, “The most outstanding feat in the history of navigation…”

1522- Francisco de Orozco settles the Oaxaca area of Mexico. Orozco had been an artillery captain under Pánfilo de Narváez.

1524- Bizkaian Juan de Orduña is secretary of the council of Mexico City.

1525- García Jofre de Loaísa (Loaysa) leads an expedition to the Spice Islands (now the Maluku Islands) trying to establish a better route to the Philippines. Also on the voyage is Juan Sebastián Elcano who had been first to circumnavigate the earth. Seven ships are involved with Loaísa, Elcano and Santiago de Guevara commanding three of them. The expedition meets with disaster. Loaísa dies one year into the trek. Elcano takes command of the expedition but dies of malnutrition and scurvy somewhere in the Pacific just one week later. Alonzo de Salazar, another Basque, takes command. He dies before reaching the Philippines at which time another Basque, Martín Iñiguez de Carquizano, takes over command. He is poisoned and dies in Tidore. Natives capture the rest of the crews. Only a handful survives. One of these survivors is Andrés de Urdaneta. He escapes after seven years in captivity and sails throughout the Spice Islands for a number of years, in spite of the efforts of the Portuguese to apprehend him. He even learns the Malay language. He then sails back to Spain, becoming the second person to sail around the world, albeit not in one continuous voyage. In 1552 Urdaneta becomes a monk and studies mathematics, astronomy, science, cosmology, Latin, military history and philosophy. He also becomes a diplomat, a humanist, and a missionary. However, his sailing days are not finished.

1526- Large and prosperous trading companies are established between the Indies and Seville. Many are Basque owned and run. As an example, one of these trading houses includes Indies’ representative Martín de Zubizarreta, while Juan Sáez de Aramburu, Francisco de Churraca and Martín Pérez de Achotegui run the office in Spain. All four are from Azcoitia, Bizkaia. Another associate is Juanés de Astigarraga.

1527- In Spain, Pánfilo de Narváez is appointed governor of Florida by Charles V and sets sail with 700 men for his return to the New World. After wintering in Cuba but weakened by storms and desertions he lands among hostile Indians on the coast of Florida in 1528 near Tampa Bay with 300 men and 80 horses. Disappointed by the lack of gold and continually harassed by Indians, beset with hunger, illness and critical tactical errors, he has his men build several crude canoes. They head up the coast of Florida and across the coasts of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. In November of 1528 the overloaded boats wash up on Galveston Island. During a storm, Narváez stays in one of the boats and is washed out to sea, never to be seen again.

1527- Captain Bartolomé de Montauser, from Bayonne, leaves Europe to hunt whales and fish for cod near Canada.

1527- Juan de Zumárraga is named first bishop of Nueva España, New Spain. (According to Basque historian Pastor, Basques were involved in every ecclesiastical sector or activity in the New World.) In Mexico Zumárraga surrounds himself with Basque relatives and compatriots and he recruits colonists from his native Durango, Bizkaia, to come to Mexico. Among these are: Antso Gartzi Larrazabal, Juan Lopez Zumárraga, Andrés Mucharaz, Martín Mucharaz, Martín Zabala, Juan Mendiola and his entire family, Patxi Urquiaga, Andres Zuricaray, Juana Zumarraga, Juan de Tolosa, Diego de Ibarra, Miguel Ibarra, and Juan Urrutia (both of whom are slave traders) Antso Lopez Agurto and Miguel Lopez Legazpi y Gorrocotagui, the man who later bloodlessly conquers the Philippines. Bishop Zumárraga is one of the most powerful and influential Spanish officials in the New World. In the 16th Century in Mexico, most Basques speak only Basque. For this reason they tend to group together. As an example, Zumárraga is the author of one of the oldest documents written in Euskara, the Basque language. In 1537 he sends a long letter to a distant relative in Durango, smuggled via a Basque ship captain named Urrutia. Written primarily in Castilian, about 400 words are in Euskara where he explains that secretly, and on his and his Basque collaborators’ behalf, some Basque shipmasters will be smuggling money into Durango. (According to professor Joxe Mallea-Olaetxe, these collaborators are Matxin Ibañez Hernani and Antso Gartzi Larrazabal.) Zumárraga does not want any Castilian official to know of these matters in case the letter falls into their hands. (A translation of the letter appears in Appendix Nine.) Zumárraga relies on several Basque shipmasters to smuggle the silver and gifts. Among them are Gonzalo Ugarte, Antso Pinaga and Joanes Ypazteco.

Among Zumárraga’s accomplishments are the introduction of the first printing press into the New World and the establishment of schools and hospitals. He founds the Colegio de Santa Cruz de Tlateloco. Historian Mallea-Olaetxe also reports that Zumárraga might also have been the first Basque sheepman in North America. Most importantly, however, he believes that the Indians are actual human beings. This is an opinion not shared by everyone, including some of his closest religious friends. Zumárraga lays the foundations for the Christian Church in Mexico and is a major force in the implantation of Western culture in Mexico.

While the position and power of the Catholic Church in Mexico is still exceptional, it was extraordinary strong in its first 300 years in the New World. The Mexican church becomes enormously wealthy through gifts and bequests that it can hold indefinitely. In these 300 years, the church comes to own one-third of all property and land in Nueva España. This lasts until 1859, when its holdings are nationalized.

1525-1527- By this early date several Basque merchants have prominently established themselves in Nueva España. Among these are Miguel Ibarra and Antso Agurto (mentioned previously) Gabriel de Valmaseda, Martín Aburruza, Martín Ipinza and Sebastián Aquearza.

1527- Spaniard Hernán Cortéz, commanding Basque owned and manned vessels, discovers Baja California. Again, a sizable number of the troops under Cortéz are Basque mercenaries who served in Spain’s Italian campaigns and later in the conquest of the Antilles in the Caribbean.

1527- Pedro de Carranza is alderman of Mexico City.

It is in this decade (1520’s) that the Basques and other soldiers of fortune begin to brave Indians and the elements as they expand their search for land and riches into the wilder, northern area of Mexico. William A. Douglass, one of the premier Basque scholars, states in an article in the journal Names: “On the eve of the discovery of the Americas, the Basques were Spain’s mariners and mercenaries par excellence. As such they were from the outset heavily involved in Spain’s New World colonial venture. Temporally, throughout the colonial era and, geographically, in all of the colonies, Basques played prominent roles as merchants, soldiers, administrators, and ecclesiastics. However, nowhere was this more the case than in the northern reaches of Nueva España during the sixteenth century.”
Historian P.J. Bakewell agrees with Douglass stating that the history of the exploration and settlement of northern New Spain is dominated by Basques in the 1500’s and 1600’s. This would include Francisco de Ibarra and Francisco Urquiñola in Nueva Viscaya, Juan de Oñate in New Mexico and General Agustín de Zavala and his son, Martín, in Nuevo Leon. These northern reaches include the Sonoran area of Mexico and what will become Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California. The Basque prominence continues through the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries as well.

1524- Cristóbal de Oñate y Narria arrives in Mexico City from Narria, a small village outside of Oñati, Gipuzkoa. By 1528 he rises to the rank of regidor. His brother Juan joins him in the New World and they head out with Nuño Beltrán de Guzmán to conquer what is now the New Galicia area of Mexico.

1530-1542-The Oñate brothers are captains in the company of soldiers under the direction of one of the most bloodthirsty and evil conquistadors in New World history, Nuño Beltrán de Guzmán, known as “Bloody Guzmán.” Among the other Basques in the expedition are Juan de Tolosa, Juan de Villalba, Domingo de Arteaga, Jerónimo Pérez de Arciniega, Martín de Rentería, Miguel de Ibarra, Jerónimo de Orozco, Juan de Zubia, Juan de Urbina, Rodrigo Guipuzcoano and Vincente and Juan de Zaldívar. In 1530 Guzmán sets off with his army of 500 soldiers and 10,000 Indians for the area that now includes the Mexican states of Jalisco, Nayarit, Aguascaliente, Durango, Sinaloa and Zacatecas. Rather than trying to convert the Indians to Christianity, Guzmán is only interested in land and power. He enslaves or tortures and slaughters the Indians and savagely takes whatever land he wants, even if it had been previously granted to other Spaniards. He then establishes encomiendas (private land grants) for himself and his men, including the Oñates. He names this area Nueva Galicia for the province in Spain where he is from and he founds the first pueblo of Guadalajara, named for the city where he was born. The Indians repeatedly attack the pueblo and it is relocated three times.

1530- On April 15, Cristóbal de Oñate founds the village of Santiago de Tequila in Nueva Galicia. Basques are heavily involved in the early development of the liquor.

1531- Oñate helps found San Miguel de Culiacán.

The Viceroy of New Spain, Antonio de Mendoza, begins hearing of Guzmán’s atrocities involving the Indians and, urged on by Franciscan Father Bartolomé de las Casas and Bishop Zumárraga, he has Guzmán arrested in 1535. He returns him to Spain in 1536 where he dies in obscurity in 1544. (Guzmán’s arrest comes after he had threatened Zumárraga with imprisonment and the gallows. Guzman’s agents also confiscate Zumárraga’s letters to the king reporting his murderous activities. Zumárraga finally manages to get a letter out of Mexico to Spain and the king, smuggled in a block of wax via a Basque sailor, and Guzmán’s crimes are exposed.)
Cristóbal de Oñate rejects the brutality of Guzmán early on. He chooses to deal with the Indians respectfully while trying to enforce the royal laws that protect them. He is a moderating influence in the otherwise brutal expansion of northern Mexico. His proven decency and honor make his association with Guzmán an interesting puzzle. This is in sharp contrast to his brother Juan. Juan brazenly takes part in the torture and slaughter of the Indians and, according to historian Marc Simmons, would occasionally feed their corpses to his dogs. Juan de Oñate is accused of numerous crimes during Guzmán’s trial but by then, with Cristóbal’s help, he escapes to Peru to avoid punishment. He dies there in exile, blind and penniless.

1531- Several Basques accompany Pizarro to attempt to conquer the Incan Empire of Peru. Among these are Antonio Navarro, García de Salcedo, Domingo de Solaluce, Juan de Avendaño, Rodrigo de Lazcano, Hernando de Aldana, Juan de Salcedo, Gómez de Carranza, Lópe Vélez de Guevara, Pedro de Aguirre, Nicolás Azpeitia, Pedro Navarro, Pedro de Bergara, Antonio de Bergara, Juan Pérez de Tudela, Gaspar de Marquina, Francisco Martínez de Zárate, Juan de Bergara, Juan Ortiz de Zárate and Martín de Marquina.

1532- Pedro de Heredia (who had already been governor of Santo Domingo and Nueva Andalucía, Columbia) settles Cartagena in the area where Juan de la Cosa had been killed years earlier. With his brother Alonso, he will found Maritue, Tolú, and Mompós, Columbia. Basques are also found in other parts of Columbia. Among them are Diego de Ospina founding Neiva; Pedro de Ursúa y Armendariz founding Pamplona and Tudela de Muzo; Juan de Lemus y Aguirre founding Tuluá; Andrés López de Galazar founding Ibargüe; Alonso de Olaya founding Villeta; Francisco Martínez de Ospina founding Remedios de Antioquia; Juan de Otalora founding Villa de Leiva; and Alvaro de Guzmán founding Buga.

1533- Gaspar de Marquina, mentioned above, in a letter to his father Martín de Gárate in Mendaro, Bizkaia, explains how he is obtaining wealth and success with Francisco Pizarro in the conquest of the Incas in Peru. He relates how he is sending gold home for his father and other relatives. He also gives a description of the Inca ruler Atahualpa and how Pizarro and just 160 Spaniards “…all armed with lances 15 feet long, and we routed them all. In the rout we killed 8,000 men in about two hours and a half, and we took much gold and clothing and many people.” Later in the same year, Incas kill Marquina. He is 21. Historians James Lockhart and Enrique Otte, commenting on Marquina’s letter say that, “The use of a different surname in the Indies…was a quite common phenomenon, particularly with the Basques, who were happy enough to let themselves be called anything the other Spaniards could pronounce.” (Emphasis added.)

1533- Fortun Ximenez Bertandona is the pilot of a ship captained by Cortez’s relative, Diego Becerra. They are sent to explore northward along the Pacific side of Mexico. Bertandona leads a mutiny and kills the tyrannical Becerra. Bertandona becomes the first European to reach the Pacific side of Baja California and may have been the first to reach present day California. It is also speculated that he gave the area its name after a mythical queen, Califia. Bertandona’s fate is unknown. Conflicting reports indicate Indians in the area may have killed him or he may have escaped only to be killed by “Bloody” Guzmán.

1533- Pizarro founds Cuzco, Peru. Among its first officials and occupants are García de Salcedo, Francisco de Castañeda and Tomás de Echandía.

1535- Among the first settlers of Lima, Peru are Juan López de Recalde, Pedro de Castañeda, García de Salcedo, Juan de Berrio, Francisco de Isasaga, Luis García San Mamés, Jerónimo Zurbano and Juan Larrañaga.

1536- Bishop Zumárraga’s closest inner-circle of advisors are Basque. They are Martín Ynoso, Juanes Ochoa Egurbide and Antso Larrazabal. Egurbide and Larrazabal are his nephews.

1537- Francisco de Ulloa reaches the southern tip of Baja California. One of the priests accompanying him is Basque Pedro de Ariche. In 1602 Sebastián Vizcaíno names the area Cabo San Lucas. (Presently, located in a wide band from the Pacific to the Sea of Cortez across the center of the Baja Peninsula, is the El Viscaino Biosphere Reserve. Within the Reserve are the Desierto de Vizcaíno and, on the Pacific side, the Bahía Sebastián Vizcaíno.)

1537- Juan de Salazar founds Fort Asunción in the area to become Paraguay.

1538- Jerónimo de Loaisa is Bishop of Lima, Peru until 1542.
1538- Adame de Olaberriaga is Fort Asunción’s Royal Treasurer and, in 1541, Domingo Martínez de Irala will formally name Asunción a city rather than a fort and it becomes the capital of Paraguay.

1539- Irala is credited with being the founder of Paraguay and is its first governor. He is the first governor in the Americas elected by a free vote of the colonists. He is also a proponent of polygamy. He sets an example by having seven wives himself; all the daughters of a prominent Indian chief.

1539- Juan de Arteaga y Avendaño is appointed Bishop of Chiapas (Mexico.) Later, Guipúzkoan Andrés de Ubilla holds the same position.

1539- Lope de Aguirre, born in Oñate, Guipuzkoa in 1518, leaves for South America as a soldier of fortune. He joins the 1560 expedition of another Basque, Pedro de Ursúa y Armendariz, to try and locate the legendary city of El Dorado at the headwaters of the Amazon. He leads a mutiny and kills Ursúa and many others in the party. (Ursúa had arrived in New Granada, South America, in 1545 and was governor of Santa Fe and Bogotá.) Aguirre has such a history of larceny and treason his nickname is “The Traitor.” (At one time he was sentenced to a public lashing for mistreating Indians. The judge, fearing for his life because of Aguirre’s reputation, tried to relocate and hide from him. To no avail. After 3 years and 1,800 miles, Aguirre tracked him down and slit his throat.) Finally, after murdering his own daughter and several priests to try and save himself, Aguirre is captured by the Spanish in Peru and executed.

1540- Pascual de Andagoya, mentioned earlier, founds the port of Buenaventura, Columbia.

1540- Viceroy Antonio de Mendoza sends Juan de Saldívar to find a land route from Mexico to Florida. He is on a strict timetable and travels “many leagues” finding only desolation and poor Indians before he must return to Mexico without success.

1541- Francisco Pizarro, the Spanish conquistador who in 1532 had crushed the Inca in Peru, is facing strong political opposition. On June 26 rivals rush his palace in Lima, attack and kill him. Among those in the assassination party are Basques Juan de Rada, Martín de Bilbao, Juan Sojo, Sebastián de Arbolancha, Bartolomé de Enciso and Pedro Navarro.

1541- In Nueva Galicia, even though Bloody Guzmán is gone, the Indians’ hatred of the Spanish remains. They unite and attack Guadalajara, again trying to drive off the Spaniards. Cristóbal de Oñate has to call upon Viceroy Mendoza for help and the Indians are eventually defeated. As a result, however, New Galicia reverts to the control of the Colonial Government of New Spain. In 1542 Guadalajara is moved one last time and re-founded under the direction of Oñate and Miguel de Ibarra and Miguel’s nephew, Diego de Ibarra. It becomes the capital of Jalisco and the second largest city in Mexico. Oñate is also is one of the founders of Culicán.
Lope de Urrea, a trusted officer under Francisco Vásquez de Coronado, accompanies him in his search for the Seven Cities of Gold throughout what will become Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas. Among the other Basques with Coronado are Melchor Díaz and junior officer Juan de Zaldívar, from Vitoria. Zaldívar is the nephew of Cristóbal de Oñate, the son of Cristóbal’s sister María.

Miguel Ibarra and Juan Zubia become rigidores of Guadalajara.

Captain Angertor Denisquet, from Saint-Jean-de-Luz, sets sail for Canada to bring back whale oil. Basques of Iparralde are excluded from the commercial activities of the Indies run and so must concentrate on the Canadian coast for whales and cod.

Frey Luís de Urbeda, an early colleague of Bishop Zumárraga, is also on Coronado’s trek into the unknown north. He stays in Tierra Nueva (what will become New Mexico) with the Indians when Coronado returns to Mexico.

Only fifty years after Columbus established La Navidad on the island of Hispaniola, Bartolomé de las Casas, a Spanish priest, historian, advocate of Indian rights and a contemporary of Bishop Zumárraga, reports that, because of his countrymen’s “killing, terrorizing, afflicting, and destroying” the natives of Hispaniola, barely two hundred natives remain on the island from an initial population of perhaps two million. The same is true throughout the Caribbean.

Cristóbal de Oñate makes the first mining strikes in Nueva Galacia: Silver at Espíritu Santo, Guachinango, Xocotlán and Etzatlán and gold at Xaltepec. The strikes are small but they encourage new settlement in the area.

Agustín de Zárate comes to Peru with the post of controller. He is the author of History of the Conquest and Discovery of Peru, published in Amberes in 1555.

The first book published in the New World is written by Bishop Zumárraga. Titled Doctrina Breve, it instructs the Aztecs, in their own language, about Catholicism. Other monumental written works by New World Basques are: Historia ecclesiastica Indiana by Jerónimo de Mendieta; Extirpación de la idolatrya del Perú by Pablo José de Arriaga; and Historia del descubrimiento y conquista del Perú by Agustín de Zarate, mentioned above.

Pedro Ortiz de Zárate comes to Peru in May. He founds the Royal High Court of Lima. Accompanying him to Peru are his wife, Catalina de Uribe y Salazar and their oldest child, later Captain Pedro Ortiz Zárate.

Claudio de Arciniega arrives in Mexico at the age of 18. He becomes a master artisan, craftsman and builder. He designs, consults on and helps erect the cathedrals of Puebla and Mexico City, both of which still stand as amazing structures today.
1546- Cristóbal de Oñate forms a company with three other Basques he had served with under Guzmán. They are Juan de Tolosa and Miguel and Diego de Ibarra, all from Gipuzkoa and all three relatives of Bishop Zumárraga. Tolosa (nicknamed “Barbalonga” or “long beard”) is sent prospecting and discovers silver at a location called La Buña. La Buña turns out to be a “mountain of silver.” They add another partner, Baltasar Temiño de Bañuelos, and become the benefactors in mining one of the largest silver discoveries ever made in North America. It provides one-fifth of the world’s silver through the eighteenth century. The mines are so productive that up to 1643 the royal fifths alone (20% taxes) amounts to twenty-nine million pesos. Total production to date exceeds several billion dollars.

The four Basques co-founded the city of Zacatecas. (Oñate and the Ibarra families also founded Guadalajara.) Diego is the first mayor of Zacatecas. Later, he has one of his legs amputated due to wounds from Indian battles.

Historian P.J. Bakewell says this about Zacatecas and Basques; “There was a tendency among emigrant Basques, above all other Spaniards in America, to congregate with others of the same tongue and regional origin. But Zacatecas was not a city numerically dominated by Basques at any time…Basque families were influential but few. Above all, Basques were great explorers; and Zacatecas the source of finance for their expeditions and the base from which they set out.”

The rich silver discoveries at Zacatecas forces Spain to commit to bring the wild northern areas of Mexico within the Nueva España Empire. The north is twice as large as the “civilized,” settled area of central Mexico.

Obviously, silver is the basis of the extreme wealth of the Oñates, Tolosas and Ibarra families. The three families are excellent examples of a privileged group called hacendados. At the top of society in this new frontier, they engage in conquest, governing, mining, agriculture and livestock raising for several generations.

1546- Martín Aranguren, a wealthy businessman and a close and trusted friend of Bishop Zumárraga, becomes administrator for Zumárraga’s Hospital de Bubas, the first hospital in the New World. Aranguren is also the sole heir to Zumárraga’s estate.

1547- Because of Indian problems, the pueblo of Zacatecas is temporarily abandoned. Diego de Ibarra and Tomás de Arrayaize return to the deserted town and build substantial stone houses, strong enough to withstand any future Indian attacks.

1548- Pedro Ocharte arrives in Mexico. In 1563 he takes over the printing business of Juan Pablos, who had been brought to Mexico by Zumárraga.

1548- Alonso de Mendoza founds the city of La Paz, the present capital of Bolivia, and incorporates all of its territory into the viceroyalty of what was then Peru.

1548- Juan de Zumárraga is appointed the first Archbishop of Mexico and notification of this appointment is sent out on July 8. However, unknown to Church officials, Bishop Zumárraga had died one month earlier.
1548- Miguel de Urrutia introduces domestic sheep into the Argentine Pampas. Instead of the small, family flocks found in the Pyrenees, the Basques must adapt and develop an extensive range sheep business in South America. (Three hundred years later in the 1850’s, the largest Basque influx into the gold fields of California comes from Argentina. These gold-seekers find raising sheep to feed to the miners more profitable than mining. Therefore, when these Argentine Basques begin tending sheep in California they have with them the techniques and practices of open-range herding that they have learned over the centuries on the Pampas in South America.)

1548- Francisco de Villagra, conquistador son of Alvaro de Sarría and Ana Velázquez de Villagra travels to Chile with Pedro de Valdivia and takes part in the conquest of Chile. He is governor of Chile four times.

1549- At the age of 10, Francisco de Ibarra comes to the New World to join his uncle Diego de Ibarra.

1549- Captain Jacques de Ibaceta and fray Andrés de Ariz leave from Bayonne for the whaling areas of Canada.

1549- Two of the oidores of the audencia of Nueva Galacia are Miguel de Contreras Guevara and Juan de Oseguera.

1550- Ochoa de las Rivas is one of the most prominent Basque merchants in Mexico. He has business connections with Basque partners in Bizkaia, Seville, Guatemala and throughout Mexico. In addition, he has arrangements with non-Basque partners in Italy and Valencia. He deals in merchandise ranging from armament to slaves.

1550- Fray Gerónimo de Mendieta is a Franciscan historian in Mexico in the middle 1500’s.

1550- Martín Ignacio Martínez de Mallea, known as Martín Ignacio de Loyola, is born in Eibar. Grand nephew of Saint Ignatius of Loyola, he is the first person to circumnavigate the earth twice (1580-1584 and 1585-1589.) He travels to Paraguay in 1603 as the Bishop of Asunción. He is probably the most traveled man in history up to the 17th Century.

1550- Diego de Ibarra is given the task of continuing the expansion of Nueva España to the north. However, because of an Indian wound, he is a cripple and turns the job over to his very young nephew, Francisco. Diego spends over 200,000 pesos financing the expansion.

1552- Martín Ruiz de Gamboa arrives in Chile. He becomes a veteran of many of the Indian wars and holds several important government offices including governor of the island of Chiloé.
1554- Francisco de Ibarra leads his first expedition at the age of 16. At age 17 he leads the first authorized exploration north and west of Zacatecas. (It is not unusual for boys to hold such responsible positions at the time. The most essential qualifications are wealth and birth right.) Between 1554 and 1574, he and Juan de Tolosa conquer the area of northern Mexico that is now comprised of the present states of Durango, Chihuahua, Coahuila, Sinaloa, Sonora, and some parts of Zacatecas, San Luis de Potosí and León. In the 1560’s Ibarra carries out extensive exploration, conquest and settlement of the unknown lands north of San Martín and names the area Nueva Viscaya after his homeland in the Basque Country.

1554- Francisco de Ibarra is severely wounded in the leg by an arrow while exploring the Gadiana Valley. It takes weeks for him to recover. However, he goes on to dominate the history of northwestern New Spain between 1554 and 1575.

1554- Fran José de Anchieta is one of the founders of Sao Paulo, Brazil and in 1565 he helps found Rio de Janeiro. He is a writer and a poet and is crucial to the establishment of stable colonial settlements in Brazil. A city in Brazil is named for him.

1555- Pedro Sarmiento de Gamboa sails to Mexico and lives there for two years. He then sails to Peru and becomes involved in many activities. He is an explorer, author, astronomer, scientist and humanist.

1555- Bartolomé de Oyarzun arrives at the mines in northern Mexico. He is a miner and trader and also heavily involved in the transportation of metals and merchandise in the Zacatecas, Mazapil, Sombrerete, Fresnillo and Guadalajara areas.

1556- Alonso de Ercilla comes to Chile as a conquistador and fights the native Araucarias. There he begins his epic poem, La Arauana. The poem, published in three parts in 1569, 1578 and 1589 is considered to be the greatest Spanish historical poem ever written.

1557- Due to imported European illnesses, fifty-five years after original Spanish contact on Cuba, only two thousand Taino Indians remain from an original population or approximately two million.

1557- In August, Juan de Tolosa and his brother-in-law Luís Cortés discover silver and lead one hundred miles northwest of Zacatecas at what will become San Martín and Sombrerete. These new deposits will out-produce Zacatecas in the late 1600’s.

1558- Francisco de Ibarra establishes the royal mining town of San Martín. Among its first settlers are Martín Pérez de Uranzu, Martín de Urrutia, Martín de Rentería, Martín de Oñez and Martín de Larraga.

1558- Several Bizkaians are working the mines in Jocotlán, Mexico. Among them are Martín de Gamón, Juan de la Vera, Francisco Hernández Escobar, and the Arguetas brothers. After some problems, Gamón is exiled from Jocotlán and flees to Zacatecas.
There, protected by the powerful Francisco de Ibarra and other Bizkains, no outsider dares to confront Gamón or speak to him as to why he was forced from Jocotlán.

1559- In August, Fray Andrés de Urdaneta, the second man to sail around the world and now a priest, lands at Pensacola Bay as he accompanies Tristán de Luna y Arellano and his 11 ships on an expedition to establish a permanent settlement and explore what is now Florida. On September 19, 1559 a hurricane sinks as many as 7 of the ships in Pensacola Bay. Two years later, the colony at the present site of Pensacola is abandoned and Urdaneta returns to Mexico.

1560- Architect Juan de Veramendi, from Bizkaia, sees the completion of his Cathedral of Cuzco in South America. Other great Basque architects in the New World are Cristóbal de Aulestia in Méridia, Yucatán; Diego de Aguirre, Matías Maestro, Agustín de Gavira, Juan de Egoaguirre and Juan Inigo de Eraso in Lima, Peru; Francisco de Ibarra in Callao; Miguel de Arregui in Cuzco; and Fray Mariano de Garay in Cayma. These men brought two new elements of construction to the Americas: The dome and the arch.

1561- Alonso de Zorita is judge of the Mexico City audiencia.

1561- Fernando Arias de Ugarte is born in Bogotá, Colombia. He will become archbishop of Lima, Peru.

He also chooses Martín de Rentería as high constable, Andres de Ibarra and Martín de Araña as captains and Martín López de Ibarra (Francisco’s nephew,) Bartolomé de Arriola and Julio de Heredía as officials of the royal treasury.

At one point of the excursion, Gamón again rebels, this time against Ibarra. Gamón takes twelve men with him. Obregón describes them as “…a turbulent lot of Basques.” Ibarra tracks them down and imprisons them. Gamón escapes but is hunted down by Ibarra and executed.

On the other hand, after another uprising and attempted revolt, Ibarra is able to check the impending mutiny, as Obregón reports, “Thanks to the Vizcainos who on innumerable occasions proved to be the most loyal and valiant of Ibarra’s followers.”

1563- Francisco Ibarra coins the name “Nueva México” for the area that will become New Mexico, Texas and Arizona. Because of his failing health, he spends the rest of his life administrating the province rather that exploring.

1564- Ibarra explores the upper tributaries of the Rio Conchos in southern Chihuahua. The next year he is appointed governor and captain general of the province of Nueva Viscaya and holds those positions until he dies of tuberculosis in 1575 at age 36. Through the combined efforts of Ibarra, Tolosa and Luis de Carvajal they carve out the provinces of Nueva Vizcaya and Nuevo León by the late 1500’s. Historian Eugenio del Hoyo credits Francisco de Ibarra as being the most important person in the colonization of northeastern New Spain.

1563- Francisco de Ibarra founds the cities of Nombre de Dios and Durango in Mexico. Durango is named after his birthplace in Bizkaia. Later, Bartolomé de Arriola is appointed lieutenant governor and head of the royal treasury of the city. Durango is the military capital of the northern frontier for many years. (According to historian J. Lloyd Mecham, since the 1560’s all of northern Mexico, including parts of the present United States, was called Nueva Vizcaya or, “New Basqueland.”

1564- Juan Ortíz de Zárate is named governor of Paraguay.

1564- Fray Andrés de Urdaneta and Miguel Lopez de Legazpi y Gorrocataugui open the sea route between Nueva España and the Orient. In 1564 a new expedition to explore the Philippines and to look for an eastern passage is organized in Mexico by Urdaneta and Legazpi. Legazpi uses his personal fortune to finance the expedition.

In the 1500’s, Spain is still hoping to make the Philippines a stopping place in route to China and her lucrative trade. The Portuguese have closed the Cape of Good Hope to all countries but themselves and so Spain must find an eastward passage across the Pacific. Going west from Acapulco to the East Indies offers no difficulty. Any navigator can steer into the belt of the northeast trade winds and stay there. The return east is an entirely different matter. It requires “tacking” back and forth in the teeth of the trade winds taking so much time no ship of the day can carry enough provisions to survive the trip. After Magellan discovers the westward passage to Asia, several attempts follow to break into the Portuguese monopoly. However, the only man who knows anything about these waters is Andrés de Urdaneta. He consents to go along as an observer and advisor and a navigator to find the way back to Mexico only if Legazpi leads the expedition. (Urdaneta is also the godfather of Legazpi’s daughter, Ysabel.) The fleet is basically a Basque enterprise with Basque leadership, manpower and capital. Mateo de Saz is captain of one of the ships and second in command. Martín de Ibarra is master of another of the ships with Francisco de Astigarribia, boatswain, Esteban Rodriguez, first mate and Pierre Plin second mate. Other Basques include Juan and Rodrigo de la Isla, Andrés de Ibarra, Martín de Goiti, Luís de la Haya, Andrés de Mirandola, Felipe de Salcedo, Guido de Lavezares, Andrés de Cauchela, Goiti Alonso de Arellano, Juan de Camuz, Pedro de Guevara, Juan de Laczano, Cristóbal Angulo, Juan de Aguierre, Pedro de Arana, Alberto de Orozco, Asensio de Aguirrre and Pedro de Gamboa. Three Basque priests are also along, Andrés de Aguirre, Pedro de Gamboa and Martín de Rada.

The fleet sails from Acapulco (Navidad, Mexico) in November 1564, under the command of Legazpi. After reaching Manila and leaving everyone else in the Philippines Urdaneta sets out with only one ship, the Nao San Pedro, to sail back to Mexico and to find the eastward passage. Shortly thereafter, the pilot and sailing master die and Fray Andres must take the helm. Scurvy leaves the vessel virtually without enough hands to sail it but Urdaneta takes the ship north 2,000 miles and then east to California and then south to Acapulco, arriving there on October 3, 1565. He completes the first voyage on the Great Circle Route across the Pacific, 10,000 miles, in four months and two days. Fourteen of the crew die of scurvy and, at Acapulco, no one even has the strength to drop anchor. In fact, the only two men able to stand at all are Captain Felipe de Salcedo, nephew of Legazpi, and Fray Andres de Urdaneta.

Not only did Urdaneta find the eastern passage back to New Spain, he was responsible for the introduction of Christianity into the Philippine area. He dies of ill health in in Mexico City in 1568 at the age of 70.

1564- Miguel Lopez de Legazpi y Gorrocatagui sees the Philippines as another source of wealth. He invades Luzon and establishes Manila as the capital of the new colony. Juan de Salcedo, his grandson, and Martin de Goiti are among the Basques who accompany him. It is during Legazpi’s governorship that Manila’s economic potentials are expanded into what will become known as the Galleon Trade. These trading ships make the trip from Manila to Acapulco each year until 1815. After Legazpi’s death, Basque Guido de Lavezares leads the government.

1564- Oidore of Guadalajara is Francisco de Mendiola.

1564- French Huguenots trying to escape the fighting between Catholics and Protestants in their homeland, arrive near what is now Jacksonville in present day Florida. They establish a settlement and fort named Fort Caroline. Their New World experience will be short-lived.

1565- Martin de Ibarra replaces Bartolomé de Arriola as lieutenant governor and treasurer of Durango.

1565- King Philip II of Spain orders Admiral Pedro Menéndez de Avilés to “hang and burn the Lutherans” at the newly established colony of Fort Caroline. (Lutherans was the name applied by the Spanish to any Protestant.) Menéndez establishes St Augustine then begins to massacre the French. (This was done after he celebrated what was probably the first parish Mass held in the future United States.) A few weeks later he ordered the execution of more than three hundred French shipwreck survivors at a site just south of St. Augustine now called Fort Matanzas, from the Spanish word for ‘slaughters.”

1565- The Basque whaling ship San Juan, from Pasajes sinks at Red Bay, Canada. It is the oldest shipwreck yet discovered north of Florida.

Throughout the sixteenth century, many Basques are present in Caracas. Among these are: Tomás de Aguirre, attorney general of the city, Antonio Arriaga, Martín de Arriaga, Pedro de Arriaga, Felipe de Arrupe, Martín de Artuaga, Juan de Arteaga, Francisco de Axpe, Prudencio de Avendaño, judge Juan de Ayarde, Simón de Basauri, Sebastián de Bengoechea, Juan de Echevarría, Bartolomé de Emasabel, Luis de Gamarra, Diego de Guevara, Diego de Henares, Juan de Ibarra, Juan de Ibaibarriaga, Diego de Leguizamón, Antonio Pérez de Mallea, Martín de Ozaeta, Juan de Sarría, Alonzo de Uría, Sancho de Urqueta, Sancho de Urquiza, Juan de Bergara, Francisco de Villar, Antón de Zabala and Sancho de Zuazo.

1568- Martín García Óñez de Loyola arrives in Peru. He is a leading soldier and is named governor of Paraguay in 1592. However, just before he takes office, King Philip II names him Royal Governor of Chile.

1568- Visiting oidor (judge) of Zacatecas is Francisco de Mendiola.

1568- Diego de Olarte is Franciscan Comisario General of Nueva España.

1568- Pedro Sarmiento de Gamboa, previously mentioned, joins the expedition of Álvaro de Mendaña through the South Pacific seas. If Medaña follows Gamboa’s directions they will reach Australia and or New Zealand. However, they discover the Solomon Islands instead. In order to take credit for the discovery, Medaña throws Gamboa’s journals and maps overboard.

1569- Lope Sánchez de Urrechiga is alguacil mayor of Guadalajara.

1569- Basque captains Juan Salcedo and Luis de Haya pacify the Philippine island of Panay.

1569-1580- Martín López de Ibarra is involved as treasurer and deputy governor of Nueva Vizcaya.

1570- The alcalde mayor of Zacatecas is Juan de Rentería.

1570- Sebastián de Lartaún is appointed Bishop of Cuzco. He doesn’t arrive in Peru until 1573. Lartaún appoints merchant Esteban de Zuaznabar Lasarte as treasurer of the Cathedral of Cuzco.

1570- Vincente de Zaldivar is appointed to his first of three terms as Teniente de Capitán General of Nueva Galicia.

1571- Miguel Lopez Legazpi founds Manila.

1572- Pedro Sarmiento de Gamboa, mentioned previously, is commissioned by the Viceroy of Peru to write a history of the Incas. His Historia de los Incas is presented to King Phillip II in the same year.
1573- Juan Ortiz de Zárate, explorer and conquistador, lands his expedition at the mouth of the Rio Plata at what is now Colonia, Uruguay. His purpose is to populate the area, found cities and introduce cattle and horses. He and fellow Basque Juan de Garay defeat the Charrúa Indians. Zárate assumes governorship in Asunción where he holds the office until 1575.

1574- Francisco Gómez de Mendiola is bishop of Guadalajara.

1574- The Basque whaling ship Madalena is driven aground on Saddle Island, Red Bay, Canada. It is the second oldest known shipwreck as yet found north of Florida.

1575- Francisco de Ibarra dies at the age of 36 from tuberculosis. Among the executors of his will are Diego de Ibarra, Martín López de Ibarra and Pedro de Uncueta Ibarra.

1578- Juan de Garay is appointed governor of Assuncion in South America. Among his many accomplishments, in 1580 he re-founds Buenos Aires, Argentina, on its old ruins and brings stability and security back to the area unknown since the days of Martínez de Irala.

1579- Martín de Hoyarcabal publishes one of the first navigational pilot books for Newfoundland. Born in Ciboure, Hoyarcabal titles the book “Voyages Avantureux” and it is widely used by Basque, French and Spanish mariners for centuries. In 1677 Pierre D’Etcheverry translates it into Labourdian Basque.

1579- Pedro Sarmiento de Gamboa, mentioned several times, becomes the commander of a naval station in the Pacific. When Sir Francis Drake attacks the coasts of Mexico and Peru, Gamboa sails out to capture him. He does not capture Drake but explores the southern Pacific coast of South America and becomes the first person to navigate the Strait of Magellan from west to east. Along the way he makes important maps and charts. He then becomes the first person to sail the Atlantic from southwest to northeast. He reaches Spain in late 1580.

1580- Buenos Aires, Argentina is permanently founded by Juan de Garay. Of the ten Spaniards who accompany Garay in the founding, four are native Basques: Rodrigo Ortiz de Zarate, Diego de Olavarrieta, Juan de Basualdo and Miguel Navarro. In addition, many of those who resettle the colony are Creole Basques, descendants of the first conquistadores: Luis Gaytán, Pedro de Izarra, Domingo de Irala, Pedro Gaytán, Miguel de Urso, Pedro de Sayas Espeluca, Cristóbal Altamirano, Fernández de Enciso, Rodrigo de Ibarrola, Domingo de Aramendia, Ochoa Marqués, Juan de Garay “el Mozo,” and Hernando de Mendoza.

1580 - Martín Ruiz de Gamboa, mentioned previously, becomes governor of Peru.

1581 - Nicolás de Guevara arrives in Potosí, Peru (now Bolivia) from Durango, Bizkaia. (Potosí is the highest city in the world at 13,500 feet above sea level.) Guevara becomes a wealthy mining entrepreneur with several profitable mines and mills. He also becomes municipal council secretary of the city.

According to historians Lockhart and Otte, “The Basques, with their iron deposits, were the miners of Spain, and were correspondingly prominent in the silver mines of the Indies, in both Mexico and Peru…”

The mines of Potosí are discovered in 1546 and during the three hundred years of Spanish colonial rule, more than six hundred metric tons of silver are removed at a cost of more than one million Indian and African slaves’ lives. Once a slave is forced to work in the mines, his life span is usually six months or less.

1583 - Domingo de Alzola is Bishop of Guadalajara.

1584 - Joanes de Echaniz, a Basque whaler from Orio, dies at Carrol Cove, Newfoundland. His last will and testament is the oldest written document in Canadian history.

1586 - Silver is not the only commodity produced in quantity in Zacatecas. The surrounding area of the city is an excellent area for raising sheep and cattle. In this year, at his hacienda of Trujillo, Diego de Ibarra’s ranch workers brand 33,000 young steers.

1588 - Fray Reginaldo de Lizarraga is sent to govern the new Dominican province of San Lorenzo Mártir, made up of the colonized territories of Chile, Paraguay and Argentina. In 1594 he fights English pirates as they attack the Peruvian coast. In 1607 he is named bishop of Asunción, Paraguay. He is a tireless traveler and a man interested in the success of the colonies, concerned with improving agricultural and mining yields and very opinionated about the administration and treatment of the Indians and their terrible working conditions. He dies in 1609 in Asunción.

1586-1595 - No fewer than 100 ships, mostly Basque built, are destroyed in Atlantic storms or from failing to clear the sand bars at Sanlúcar or Veracruz. Commander of the New Spain fleets at this time is Aparicio de Arteaga y Zamudio and he initiates improvements to remedy this situation. His father is Admiral Aparicio de Arteaga of the Indies escort fleet.

1590 - Pedro de Viscarra arrives in Chile from Spain. He is twice Royal Governor of Chile.

1590 - Simón Bolívar “the elder” (the fifth paternal grandfather of Simón Bolívar, considered the architect of American independence) establishes a boarding school of Spanish grammar in Caracas that will be directed by Juan de Arteaga and Simón de Basauri. All three are native Bizkaians. The elder Bolívar is also the attorney general and alderman-for-life of Caracas. However, he is also a slave trader. Other Basque slave traders in the area are Juan de Urquiza, master of the island of Margarita, and Esteban de Iriziar, both of whom are sentenced in 1589 for their collaboration with Dutch slave traffickers.

1592- By this time, Basques have been in the New World for over one hundred years.

1592- Martín García Óñez de Loyola, from Azpeitia, Guipuzkoa, is appointed governor of Paraguay. However, before he can take office the king reassigns him to govern Chile, as he is considered the officer most qualified to end the War of Arauco. On the 24th of December Óñez is ambushed and killed by Indians, as were all but two of his men.

1592-Three Basques play important roles in the development of Nuevo Reino de Leon, Mexico. Pedro de Arizmendi Gogorrón and his friend, Juan de Zavala, find huge silver deposits at what is now San Luis Potosí in northern Mexico. They establish the mining town of San Luis. Arizmendi develops mines, builds smelters, stamp mills and refining furnaces. He also owns huge estancias throughout the region. His peaceful dealing with the hostile Indians revolutionizes relations between the warring tribes of the area and the Spanish. As a result, the economy of the region flourishes. Later, as the mines begin to diminish in their output of valuable minerals, Arizmendi uses his fortune to finance large sheep and cattle ranches for his entire family as he transitions from mining to an agrarian life.

Juan de Zavala goes on to become even wealthier than Arizmendi and becomes one of the richest citizens and one of the largest philanthropists of San Luis Potosí. (His parents are Juan de Tellaeche and María Díaz de Zavala.)

The third Basque, Don Agustín de Zavala, no relation to Juan, is also one of the first discoverers of silver in San Luis Potosí and lives to overshadow both Arizmendi and Juan de Zavala in his wealth and generosity. He is born in Elorrio, Bizkaia to Pedro García de Azcarretazábal and Doña María de Zavala. Pedro is from the valley of Leniz and María is the last daughter of Don Martín de Zavala, from the church district of San Agustín de Echavarría and María de Leguerica from Elorrio.

In 1608, Don Agustín participates in the discovery of the rich mines of the Los Ramos area and he relocates to Zacatecas. In 1613 he is appointed governor of Nuevo Reino de León and begins to use his personal fortune to protect and improve the province. Among his many accomplishments are the reconstruction, at his cost, of the church and convent of San Agustín in Zacatecas. He is also a general in the Spanish army. In 1625 Agustín is knighted into the Order of St. James and in 1646, the year Don Agustín dies in Zacatecas, he is captain general’s lieutenant in the kingdom of la Nueva Galicia.

Don Martín de Zavala, Agustín de Zavala’s illegitimate son, born in 1597 north of Zacatecas in the mining town of Real de Pánuco, spends thirty-eight years in the governing of Nuevo Reino de León. During that time he gives it autonomy, establishes new settlements, stabilizes the economy and shapes its customs and traditions. Chapters have been written in history books regarding his accomplishments.

Francisco de Urdiñola

1593- Drawn to the area by wild grapevines and a freshwater spring, Francisco de Urdiñola y Larrumbide, mentioned previously as one of the founders of the city of Saltillo, builds a winery at Mission Santa María in Parras, in the Province of Coahuila, Mexico. It is the first commercial winery established in the New World. Parras becomes the center for wines and brandy throughout New Spain in the colonial period. Parras’ wines hold a virtual monopoly in Mexico until the end of the eighteen-century.

Urdiñola is an explorer, soldier, miner, agriculturalist, colonizer, governor and a prominent figure in the discovery and settlement of Nueva Vizcaya.

Born in Oiartzun, Gipuzkoa to Juanes de Urdiñola and Isabel de Larrumbide Echenagucia y Urgarte, Urdiñola comes to the New World in 1573. Urdiñola is chosen by the Viceroy of New Spain to settle New Mexico. However, due to false charges of murdering his wife, brought about by a disappointed fellow applicant, Juan Bautista de Lomas y Colmenares, and the customary slowness at which the Spanish legal system works, Urdiñola spends the next six years proving his innocence thus losing the colonization of New Mexico to Juan de Oñate.

However, Urdiñola goes on to accumulate what is considered to be the largest land holdings in the world. His estancias cover millions of acres including most of the state of Coahuila and areas of surrounding provinces. (One hacienda, Patos, covers half of Coahuila.) His household includes fellow Oiartzun immigrants García Irigoyan, Pedro Larrea, León Isasti and Juan de Baracaldo. In addition, he is governor of Nueva Viscaya for ten years and his wealth makes it possible for his great-great-grand daughter’s husband, the Marqués de Aguayo, to colonize Texas.

1593-1594 The first Basque Merchant Consulates are established in Mexico City and Lima, Peru.
1595- Juan de Tolosa y Cortéz Moctezuma, son of Juan de Tolosa, mentioned before, becomes vicar of Zacatecas. His sister, Isabel, marries Juan de Oñate y Salazar, Cristóbal’s son.

1596- By this date, two Panama-based Basques, Francisco & Miguel de Eraso own 184 ships, almost monopolizing trade between Europe and the New World.

1596- Frey Geronimo de Mendieta writes Historia Ecclesiastica Indiana, the history of evangelization of New Spain. It is not published until 1870. Frey Mendieta dies in 1604.

1597- Antonio de Urquiola, from Guetaria, is appointed director of shipbuilding at Lezo in the Basque Country. Lezo is destroyed by the French in 1638 and never rebuilt as a shipbuilding center.

1597- Alonso de la Mota y Escobar is bishop of Guadalajara.

Don Juan de Oñate, to be covered next, is the son of Cristóbal de Oñate and is married to Isabel de Tolosa Cortéz Moctezuma. She has one of the most amazing family lineages in the New World. She is great-granddaughter of Aztec monarch Moctezuma, granddaughter of Hernán Cortez, the conqueror of Mexico, and the illegitimate daughter of Basque silver millionaire and land baron Juan de Tolosa.

1598- Juan de Oñate y Salazar is sent by the King of Spain to find if there is a territory north of Mexico that will rival its wealth. In January of 1598 he leads a personally financed expedition to try and find “another Mexico.” This area is known as New Mexico and is thought to extend all the way to Newfoundland.

As is the Basque custom, Oñate surrounds himself with Basque relatives and friends on the expedition. His four brothers; Luis, Fernando, Cristóbal and Alonso (Alonso will also become solicitor-general for the mine owners of New Spain) are made official agents and are to remain behind and use Oñate’s power of attorney to send supplies, raise money and represent him at the viceregal court. Oñate’s nephew, Cristóbal de Zaldívar, is also to stay behind to provision the trek. Cristóbal de Zaldívar’s brothers are selected to accompany Oñate. Juan de Zaldívar is placed second in command with the rank of maese de campo or field marshal. Younger brother Vincente de Zaldívar is made sargento mayor or lieutenant marshal. Also along on the expedition, and listed as a sergeant with “complete armor for himself and horse” is Oñate y Salazar’s nine year old son, Cristóbal de Naharriondo Pérez Oñate y Cortéz Moctezuma. Among the other Basques on the expedition are: Asensio de Archuleta, Sebastián de Gaceta, Pedro Gimenez, Domingo de Lezama, Cristóbal de Lizaga, Leon de Ysasti, Juan Lopez de Yllareta, Jorge de Zumaya, Miguel, Juan and Francisco Olague, Hernando de la Rea, Martín Ruiz de Aguirre, Juan de Velasco y Zuñiga, Martín de Sorchaga, Juanes de Isasti and Marcos de Zamudio.

The exploration party consists of five hundred men, one hundred thirty of which take their families along with them. They also bring over seven thousand head of livestock and eighty-three wagons and carts for food and provisions. On this trip Oñate brings the first domesticated sheep and chili peppers into what will become the United States. They group heads straight across the northern desert of Mexico and withstand horrible shortages of food and water. Finally, they come upon the Río Grande River and, on April 30, Oñate y Salazar officially takes possession of the entire area drained by the river for Philip II of Spain. Here, Oñate y Salazar gives present day El Paso, Texas, its name; El Paso del Río del Norte.

On this trip Oñate founds the kingdom of New Mexico, becomes its governor and helps found Santa Fe. He builds the first church in New Mexico in September of 1598 at the pueblo of San Juan Bautista. (In that first church, Oñate’s cousin, Fray Cristóbal de Salazar delivers the first sermon in New Mexico on September 8, 1598.)

One of Oñate’s captains is Gaspar Perez de Villagrá. Villagrá relates his travels in New Mexico in an epic poem written in 1610. While not acclaimed for its literary merit, it is an excellent source of historical information.

1598-1599-Vincente de Zaldívar and seventy of Oñate y Salazar’s soldiers retaliate against the Indians of the Acoma Pueblo (the longest continually lived-in village in the United States) in what is now New Mexico. According to one version, the Acomans had killed thirteen Spanish soldiers, including Oñate’s nephew Juan de Zaldívar, when they lured the Spaniards onto their mesa top. Oñate sends Zaldívar’s brother, Vincente, to quell the “uprising” and, as a punishment, Oñate supposedly orders the right foot (or toes) cut off of all surviving men of the Pueblo over the age of 25. (There is a great deal of speculation over whether these mutilations actually occurred or not.)

In 1998 when a bronze statue of Oñate was erected near Española, New Mexico, an unknown vandal cut off the statue’s right foot. There is also an eighteen ton, thirty-six feet tall statue of Oñate in El Paso, Texas. It is the largest and heaviest equestrian statue in the world.

One reason Oñate y Salazar’s statue was erected in New Mexico was to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the first Thanksgiving in the U.S. On April 20, 1598 Oñate led the members of his expedition in a Thanksgiving feast and celebration to give praise for finding the Río Grande River after many days of extreme duress during which the group had survived weeks of food and water rationing and, finally, no water at all for five days. Also on this day, the first play performed in America was created and presented for this celebration. This predates the Pilgrims’ Thanksgiving in New England by twenty-five years. (Historian Kenneth C. Davis contends that the French settlers of the short-lived settlement at Fort Caroline, Florida held the first U.S. Thanksgiving service in 1564.)

(Cristóbal Oñate brought his sister and her husband, Ruiz Dias de Zaldívar, from the Basque Country to Mexico. Two of their sons, Cristóbal and Juan de Zaldívar marry daughters of Juan de Tolosa, as did Cristóbal Oñate’s son, Juan de Oñate y Salazar. Juan de Zaldívar served with Coronado on his expedition, mentioned earlier. The Zaldívar and Oñate families become so intricately related that Juan de Oñate y Salazar is both uncle and second cousin to the Zaldívar brothers, Juan and Vincente, and later becomes the father-in-law of Vincente when Vincente marries Oñate y Salazar’s daughter. Vincente and Juan de Zaldívar had accompanied Oñate y Salazar into New Mexico and Juan was the brother killed by the Acoma Indians. In addition, making things even more confusing, Juan de Oñate y Salazar’s father, great-grandfather, son, a brother, several cousins and several nephews are all named Cristóbal.)

Don Juan de Oñate y Salazar and other explorers and colonizers for the king of Spain are, basically, kings of their own domains. These wealthy and powerful men of Spain’s northern reaches colonize, preside over and sustain their individual empires at their own expense. Therefore, the king grants them almost total power and feudal independence--while sometimes trying to trick them out of their holdings. As an example of how these men are respected and addressed, when Oñate is introduced it is as, “Don Juan de Oñate, governor, captain general, and adelantado of the kingdoms and provinces of New Mexico and those adjacent and bordering, their pacifier and colonizer for the king our lord.”

However, not all of these colonizers are qualified to handle such power and authority and they often are at odds with other men of influence who attempt to wrest away their property and status.

1598-One of Oñate y Salazar’s soldiers is Asensio Archuleta, from Eibar in the Basque Country. He and his wife, Anna Pérez Bustillo, become one of the several original colonizing families of New Mexico, remaining there through all types of early adversity.

1598- Extensive whaling by the continental Basques of Iparralde hits its peak off Canada in this year. Among the captains and whaling masters involved at this time are: Pedro de Susi, Perocho de Urtubai, Miguel de Echeto, Martín Zabaleta, Pedro Sanz, Joanes de Larralde, Joanes de Gasteluzar, Miguel de Amézaga, Miguel de Suarade, Joanes de Arestegui, Joanes de Araneder, Marticot de Echevarri, Martín Sáez de Aremarkendi, Joanes de Echevarri, Joanes de Arrazu, Esteban de Iriarte, Joanes de Farga, Sabat de Lasala, Juan Fais, Pelen Dugarana, Miguelón de Ansogarlo, Juanot de Arrecht, Martín Sáez de Lizardi, Joanes de Aranybar, Marticot de Garalde, Beltrán de la Ronda, Juan Loco, Martín de Larraegui, Pietre Sáez de Agorreta, Oyer de Arriaregarí, Martín Sáez de Ibaneta, Marticot de Inorai, Juaneto de Arrese, Joanes de Irigoyen Basco de Mendi, Sabat de Larregui, Joanot de Arrazabal, Martín de Iparraguirre, Joanes de Zuricarai, Juanes de Bidarte, Martín de Miranda, Miguel de Oyarzábal, Joanes de Ugarte, Ogero de Challa and Joanes de Oyhagaray.

After 1598, the whaling business moves west to the peninsular Basque coast. Many Gipuzkoans and Bizkaians become wealthy and successful during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries from the bounty of Canada. Among these are: Martín Cardel, Domingo de Albistur, Pablo de Aramburu, Francisco de Illareta, Martín Sáez de Echave, Domingo de Mendaro, Miguel de Iturain, Juanes de Lizara, Miguel Eguzquiza, Martín Ruiz de Echave, José Pérez de Hoa, Domingo de Gorocica, Martín de Zaldivia, Cristóbal Arias, Juan de Anzonegui, Martín Ochoa de Irazabal, Martín Davile de Aguirre, Juan de Ochoa, Domingo de Sarasu, Juan de Espilla, Andrés de Alzola, Pedro Ochoa Arriola, Esteban Lete, Domingo Gauchegui, Miguel de Irasa, Ramón de Arrieta, Juan Zubieta, Juan Martínez de Careaga, Rodrigo Legarra, García de Uribe, Martín Pérez de Idiazquez, Domingo López Izarra, Miguel Ceraín, Juan Armendia, Juan Bolíver, Juan Igarza, Antonio and Miguel de Erauso.

1598- The first Basque Brotherhood, the Congregation of Lima, is established in Peru. Modeled after those in the Basque Country, the Brotherhood’s legal purposes are for legal protection, mutual aid, spiritual help medical care, confessions in the Basque Language and funeral and burial services. In actuality, they spread news and information, protect businesses, provide political influence, aid in social ascension and help in the various markets.

1599- Luis Eraso signs a contract to supply Puebla’s market with sixteen thousand sheep. Two of his employees are from his hometown of Oiartzun: Juanes de Arbelaitz and Juan Ybañez. Eraso has business contacts with other Basques in the area: Juanes Eraso, Juanes Arizmendi and Martín Gaztelu. He also does business with Martín De Oyarzun, Cholula’s alguacil, Pedro de Yrala, alcalde of Puebla and Puebla merchant Juan Martínez de Olaea. Eraso maintains contact with prominent Basques from his hometown who are now in Mexico City. These include wealthy merchants Thomas Zuaznabar y Aguirre and Juan de Arbide and scribe in the viceroyalty, Juan de Aguirre.

A mention here of the semi-legendary Catalina de Erauso, also know as La Monja Alférez (The Lieutenant Nun.) Born in 1595 in San Sebastián, she comes to the New World and enlists as a soldier under the name of Alonso Díaz Ramírez. She gains a reputation as a courageous soldier, gambler and fighter and kills many men in duels. She also works in commerce, always for Basque businessmen. After killing a man she reveals her gender to escape hanging and returns to Spain. She once again returns to Mexico and works as a mule driver under the name of Antonio de Erauso. She dies in 1650.

1601- Oñate y Salazar explores into what will become Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas.
1602- Martín de Aróztegui is appointed veedor general of the Atlantic fleet. He is highly respected by his peers. It is said that he is “a model of integrity and efficiency” and he “knows the language and topics of discussion of seamen.” This may mean he knows the jargon of the sailors, which is undoubted true. However, it probably alludes to the fact that most of the mariners are Basque like himself.

1602- Padres Diego de Arcaya and Antonio de Zalduendo are working in Saltillo.

1602- Sebastian Vizcaíno leads an exploration party from Acapulco, up the coast of what is now California with 3 ships, 200 men and 3 Carmelite Friars. He is searching for safe harbors for galleons returning to Mexico from the Philippines. On November 10 he reaches San Miguel Bay, discovered and named in 1542 by Portuguese explorer João Rodrigues Cabriho. Cabriho was known as Juan Rodríguez Cabrillo in Spanish. Because his flagship is named San Diego and because the feast day for saint San Diego de Alcalá is only two days off, Vizcaíno renames the harbor San Diego. A tent church is erected and on November 12, 1602, he takes part in the first Mass held in California. He remains at the site for 8 more days refitting his ships and burying crewmembers that have died with scurvy.

As Vizcaíno continues his expedition up the coastline of California, among the additional sites he names are San Clemente, Catalina, San Pedro, Santa Barbara, Point Conception, Monterey and Carmel.

Antonio de la Ascención, one of the priests with Vizcaíno, draws the first map of the Santa Barbara channel showing several Chumash Indian villages on what Vizcaíno called “la costa segura de buena gente” (the safe coast of good people.) In his diary, Vizcaíno describes a Chumash tomel, or canoe, in a rather biblical manner: “…in another canoe, so well-constructed and built that since Noah’s arc a finer and lighter vessel with timbers better made has not been seen.”

Point Conception, named by Vizcaíno, is one of the oldest European place names in the U.S. Other place names in the Santa Barbara area still in evidence today named by Vizcaíno are Cojo Canyon, Espada Canyon, Gaviota and Carpinteria.

As more and more Basque males came to the New World, their emigration was not only having an effect on Nueva España but also on the villages they left behind in the Basque Country. Historian Juan Javier Pescador suggests that some of those who returned to their villages brought back wealth that disrupted the traditional economy and hierarchy of the community. Also, with fewer men in some of the villages, women took on new roles and responsibilities on the farms and in the towns. Even the Church changed, having to adopt some to some New World religious practices and saints popular with the returning adventurers.

In addition, according to historian José Manuel Azcona Pastor, by 1520 two new American plants, beans and corn are added to the crops grown in the Basque Country. The potato reaches the Basque region of Europe in the late sixteenth century and these three crops, being more dependable than the native millet, increase agricultural land use and production in Euskadi.
1604- Juan de Oñate y Salazar leaves the Rio Grande region of New Mexico on October 7 to explore into what will become Arizona and the lower Colorado River area arriving at the Pacific on the coast of what is now the Sea of Cortez in January 1605.

1605- On April 16, on his way back from the Gulf of California, Oñate carves his name on a rock cliff now called El Morro in northwest New Mexico. His inscription, translated from the Spanish reads:

> There passed this way the Adelantado Don Juan de Oñate, from the discovering of the South Sea, on the 16th of April, 1605.

Oñate is the first of several early Basques to leave their names on this rock face.

1604-1605- Master carpenter and ship builder at Lequeitio, Juan de Uriate and several of the best shipwrights in Bizkaia, including Martín de Zantua and San Juan de Axpe are ordered by King Philip to improve the ship design of all ships headed to the Indies.

1607- The first successful English colony in the New World is founded at Jamestown, one hundred and fifteen years after Columbus’ first voyage, in what will become Virginia.

1608- Juan Oñate y Salazar is called to Mexico City. In 1613 he faces several charges including cruelty during the Acoma rebellion. He is fined, banished from New Mexico permanently and from Mexico City for four years. He spends the rest of his life clearing his name, evidently with some success. He dies in Spain in June of 1626.

1610- Juan Zurita is Comisario General of Nueva España.

1611- Sebastián Vizcaíno, who had traveled the coast of California, explores the region of Japan searching for the islands Ricas de Oro y Plata.

1614- The Basque brotherhood, the Congregation of Potosí is established.

1614- Don Agustín de Zavala, mentioned earlier, appoints Captain Cristóbal de Irurreta chief magistrate and captain of war in the city of Zacatecas.

1615- Zavala appoints Irurreta chief magistrate and captain of war for Monterrey.

1616- In Zacatecas, an elaborate church and Jesuit college is built with an endowment of 100,000 pesos from Vincente de Zaldívar and his wife, Doña Ana de Bañuelos.

1618- Ruthless slaver Juan de Eulate becomes Governor of New Mexico. According to historian France V. Scholes, Eulate was, “…a tactless, irreverent soldier whose actions were inspired by open contempt for the Church and its ministers and by an exaggerated conception of his own authority as the representatives of the Crown.” He conducts illegal slave raids on the Apache and Navajo. He leaves New Mexico in 1625 and is tried and convicted of slave trading in 1626.

1618-1625- Alonzo de Idiáquez is superintendent of all shipbuilding for the Indies.

1620- In the 100 years since conquest, the Indian population of Mexico has dropped from 17 million to 1 million due mainly to the European diseases of smallpox, measles, typhus, and influenza. The natives have no naturally acquired resistance to these illnesses.

1620- In this year, Pilgrims from England found the second English colony in the New World at what will become Plymouth, Massachusetts, one hundred twenty eight years after Columbus’ first voyage.

1621- In Nueva Galacia, Domingo Lázaro de Arregui describes how the hearts of agave plants are squeezed to produce a clear but strong liquor—mezcal (early tequila)—in the frontier regions of New Spain.

1621- Durango, Nueva Viscaya, becomes the first frontier community to receive the status of ciudad.

1622- Three of the five members of the Maritime Sector of the Council of War that controls Spanish shipping to the Indies are Basque. They are: Martín de Aróztegui, mentioned before, Juan de Pedroso, and Miguel de Ipeñarrieta de Araoz.

1924- Agustín de Zabala is field marshal in Zacatecas. At the same time, Martín de Zabala, possibly Agustín’s brother, is governor and captain general of Nuevo Reino de León, Mexico.

1625- Francisco de Villarreal is advisor of the Head Accountant’s Office of the Mexican Treasury.

Basque Pirates of the Caribbean

1622-1679 are the peak years of privateering (pirating) for Basque corsairs. The Caribbean Sea covers almost two million square miles with more than one thousand islands, islets and keys, mostly uninhabited, as places to hide. The Basques involved in the practice are, technically, “privateers” because they sail under the Spanish flag, with the encouragement of the Spanish monarchy. Their presence in the Caribbean adds to the strength of the Spanish navy. However, to the French, English, Dutch and Portuguese ships they attack and capture, they are pirates.
At the time, the main corsair and privateer port of Spain is Donostia in Guipuzkoa. Almost three hundred pirate ships call Donostia their homeport while over seventy call Hondarribia home.

When a Basque privateer captures a ship, three-fourths to four-fifths of the cargo or “loot” goes to the Spanish government and the attacking ship keeps one-fourth to one-fifth. Successful privateer captains gain commissions in the Spanish navy and attain higher social and economic status. The profits involved attract many outfitters, ship owners, captains and crews. Among these are: Alonso de Idiaquez, Agustín de Diústegui, Miguel de Mecoalde, Francisco de Zárraga Beográn, Antonio de Beroiz, Guillermo Franquelin and Lorenzo de Echevarri.

The Basque privateering did not stop in 1679. In 1686 Basque corsair captain Pedro de Alcega requests a Basque chaplain for his ship because most of his crew do not understand or speak Castilian. Even later, in 1730, captain Ignacio de Noblesa of the Basque pirate frigate San Ignacio, is plundering Dutch merchant ships off the Venezuelan coast for flour, spirits, oil, gunpowder, arms, tobacco and cacao.

1626- Martín de Zavala opens the region of Nueva Leon. He founds Monterrey and it becomes an important mining center. He brings many relatives to the area and many miners to support the mines. The first priest of Monterrey is Martín Abad de Uría. The Captain of Monterrey is Hernando de Ugarte y la Concha.

1630- According to historian H.H. Bancroft, fray Martín Azpilcueta gains the trust of the native peoples at Batuco, Sonora. However, a hostile band of Indians from the Sonora Valley wants to frighten all the padres from their area by killing Azpilcueta. He sends them a message to hurry and come after him, as he will be waiting to behead them all. He surrounds himself with firearms and machetes and when they come and threaten him he fires a shot into the air and displays a machete. The Indians flee and do not bother his mission again. In fact, they become converts. Historian Charles Polzer says of Azpilcueta, “To give up without a fight would be to betray the proud Basque traditions of centuries of battle.” Historian John Bannon refers to Azpilcueta as a “…colorful and scrappy Basque…”

1633- Cibrian de Lizaraga is the first Governor of the Caribbean island of St. Martin.

1634- Agustín de Urquiza, Juan Bautista de Adalpe and a young Indian herder attempt to trail two thousand sheep to Monterrey as food for the pueblo and profit for themselves. Indians attack and kill the three of them and steal their sheep.

1635- Lope Díaz de Armendariz, from Araba, is viceroy of Mexico.

1635- Cristóbal de Arestí Martínez de Aguilar is bishop of Buenos Aires.
1636- Fray Antonio de Ybargaray is sent to Pecos, New Mexico, to attempt to halt the abuses of governor Francisco Martínez de Baeza. His efforts result in a new governor, Luis de Rosas, who turns out to be no better than Baeza.

1636- Hernando de Mendiola establishes a hacienda and several successful ranches in Nueva Leon.

1636- Juan de Arechuleta (Archuleta) inscribes El Morro cliff in New Mexico. Translated from the Spanish, it reads:

We passed by here, the Captain-Sergeant-Major Juan de Arechuleta and the Adjutant Diego Martin Barba and the Lieutenant Agustín de Ynojos, year of 1636.

Pedro de Echenaque also leaves his name on El Morro but leaves no date.

1637- Domingo Ochoa de Irazagorria is inspector of the Spanish fleets.

1638- Sebastián Pérez de Gamedio Irigoyen is cabildo scribe of San Juan Bautista de Caldereyta, Mexico.

1640- Cristóbal Pérez de Lazarraga is head priest of Cartagena until 1648.

1640- Juan de Archuleta, (mentioned previously) son of Asensio and now the head of this wealthy and prominent New Mexican family, is probably the first European to enter present-day Colorado.

1640- Juan Amusátegui e Idiáquez is mayor of San Salvador de Jujuy, Argentina. Later he becomes a brigadier and participates in numerous Indian campaigns.

1642- By this time, Basques have been in the New World for over one hundred and fifty years.

1643- Archuleta, the first European to see Colorado, is amongst a group implicated in a plot to assassinate the governor of New Mexico, Alonzo de Pacheco de Herédia. He is found guilty and beheaded in the plaza of Santa Fe.
1644- The senior judge of the Audencia of Mexico is Don Francisco de Rojas y Oñate.

1647- Francisco de Ibarra is a visiting Jesuit in Northern Mexico.

1650- Beginning in this year, during the administration of Governor Hernando de Ugarte y la Concha, several of the southern Pueblo towns of New Mexico conspire with the Apache to begin a new war with the Spaniards to drive them out of the area. The plot is discovered and nine native leaders are hanged and dozens of others are sold into slavery.

1652- Nicolás de Gueycoichea is the tax collector of Zacatecas.

1657- Martín de Uraga opens a new mining area near Zacatecas named Cerro de Buenavista.

1659- Bernardo López de Mendizábal becomes governor of New Mexico. He has a reputation as being an extortionist, devious and is described as “…a petulant, strutting, ungracious criollo with a sharp tongue and just enough education to be dangerous.”

1659- In New Mexico, governor Mendizábal, because of his discontent with the Church, almost always takes the side of the Indians in their disputes with the priests. In his first year as governor, he initiates his problems with the friars as he prohibits involuntary labor from Indians at the missions.

1659-1684- Two important silver merchants in Mexico City are Dámaso de Zaldívar, and Captain Juan de Urrutia Retes.

1660- Basque fishermen from Lapurdi set up installations at Plaisance and Cap-Breton Isle, in what will become Canada.

1660- Governor Mendizábal of New Mexico, tries to establish a Sonora to New Mexico road. Apache Indians make the route extremely hazardous. Even with the problems with the Indians, he still takes their side, as he remains extremely anti-clergy until he dies in jail during the Mexico City Inquisitions.

1662- As an example of the distances and time involved in travel, Ensign Pedro de Arteaga is assigned to take prisoner Francisco Gómez Robledo from Santo Domingo, New Mexico, to Mexico City to be judged at the Inquisitions being held. The trip takes from October 1662, to April 1663. Arteaga is paid 150 pesos. Robledo is acquitted. California historian Frank Latta reports that even as late as the middle 1800’s, it may take one to two years for a letter to reach Alta California from Mexico.

1662- Diego Hordoño Sarricolea y Zamudio attains the position of admiral of the Armada of the South Seas (South America) and the next year he is named general of the same command.
1666- Fran Juan Bernal is a missionary in New Mexico.

1675- Bernardo Zumbil y Echarri is Corregidor (mayor) of Zacatecas.

1667- Nicolás de Azcárraga is governor of the province of Nuevo Reino de Leon, Mexico.

1670-1674- The governor of Puerto Rico is Gaspar de Arteaga y Aunaovidao. He has an explosive temper and is independent and not very cordial, even with his own family.

1674- The governor of Río de la Plata is José de Garro. He is also governor of Chile between 1682 and 1692.

1676- Isidro de Atondo y Antillón is appointed governor and captain general of Sinaloa.

1676- Antonio de Azcona Imberto is bishop of Buenos Aires.

1677- Domingo de Noriega is Comisario General of Nueva España.

1678- Led by Italian friar Eusebio Francisco Kino and Basque Matías Goñi, Jesuits reach agreement with Atondo y Antillón, governor of Sinaloa, to study the possibility of building missions in Baja California. In the same year Atondo y Antillón sets out on an expedition to establish colonies in California. Because the Spanish have been unable to subdue the Indians with force, he had been commissioned to investigate the possibility of religious intervention by the Jesuits and to look for the opening of new commercial areas. After exploring the coast of Baja California (which he thought was an island) he takes possession of Lower California in the name of the king of Spain on April 1, 1683 near the Bay of La Paz. (Sebastián Vizcaíno had given La Paz its name in 1596.)

1678- Pascual Iriate, a former smuggler but an accomplished sea captain, is sent to the Straights of Magellan by the viceroy of Peru to search for English intruders into South America. He finds no English and has a son die on the excursion.

1678- Francisco de Archuleta and Doña Bernadina Baca become the first couple married in El Paso del Norte.

1678- General Don Andrés de Rezabal begins his involvement in military operations in Sonora.

1678- The missions of San Pablo de Labradores and San Francisco are founded in Nueva Leon. Captain Don Miguel de Ezcoriguëla distributes the surrounding land to the settlers.
1680-1682 In Texas, Fray Francisco Ayeta founds missions Socorro, San Antonia de Senecu, Corpus Christi de la Isleta and San Lorenzo. For his exceptional work, he has been called one of New Mexico’s greatest men.

1680- In New Mexico, the Pueblo Indian revolt is disastrous for the Spanish. The combined tribes of the province killed six hundred Spanish men, women and children and twenty-one priests. The Spaniards retreat to El Paso (now Juarez, Chihuahua) as in the uprising towns, villages and churches are leveled.

1681- The Basque brotherhood, the Congregation of Mexico is established.

1681- There are many excellent Basque governors in the New World. However, two of the worst are in Nueva Leon in this single year. The first, Domingo de Vidagaray, appointed by his personal friend King Carlos II, lasts only three months and nineteen days. He is wasteful and arrogant and dies due to “…banquets…and having eaten too many watermelons and cantaloupes…” He is replaced by Juan de Echeverría who is “…sickly and choleric…unjust and greedy…” Due to many complaints, the viceroy is forced to remove Echeverría from office before a rebellion is started against him.

1681-1684 and 1699- Juan Bautista Ancieta is a visiting Jesuit in Northern Mexico.

1682- Juan de Luzurriaga is Comisario General of Nueva España.

1683-1685- Matías Goñi and Eusebio Kino explore Baja California searching for possible mission sites.

1683- Don Agustín de Echéverz de Subiza is governor of Nueva Leon, Mexico.

1684- At age 12 Jean L’Archeveque (also known as Juan de Archibeque) joins the expedition of René Robert Cavelier, Sieur de LaSalle, to reach the Mississippi. Born in Bayonne, he is a member of the group that assassinates La Salle. After imprisonment in Spain he settles in Santa Fe in 1694. He marries and attains wealth but continues as a soldier and is a scout for Juan de Ulíbarri.

1684- By the time he is twenty-eight years old, Antonio de Gaztañeta has already made eleven round trips between the Americas and Spain with his father Francisco, who is a Basque sailor. Antonio goes on to be a shipbuilder and the head of the Spanish treasure fleet.

1685- Martín de Echegaray sails from the east coast of Florida around the tip of the peninsula and into the Gulf of Mexico. He writes the king suggesting that the area be occupied.

1686- Along the northern frontier of Sonora and the provinces of Casas Grandes and El Paso the Suma, Jocome, Jano, Pima and Sobaipura Indians leave a trail of destruction 250 miles long. They destroy fifteen cattle and horse ranches and more than 100 thousand head of livestock. Several hundred Spanish are killed and five missions are destroyed. At the time, Sonora had no military defense.

1686- The Rivas-Iriarte expedition makes a complete circuit of the Gulf of Mexico and may have been the first Europeans to see western Louisiana. On Christmas morning, Martín de Rivas and Pedro de Iriarte set off from Vera Cruz to find the Sieur de La Salle’s lost Texas colony. They do so in two 60-foot open vessels called piraguas, equipped with 20 oars per side and one sail. They carry provisions for three and one half months with 65 soldiers and sailors in each boat and tow canoes for exploring shallow water. The expedition makes the first known exploration of both Galveston Bay and Sabine Lake. Because of their shallow-draft boats, they are able to explore many of the bays and inlets earlier expeditions had to bypass, including Atchafalaya Bay, the Mississippi Passes and Mobile Bay. They return to Vera Cruz via Havana in July of 1687.

1686- Fray Juan de Luzuriaga is commissioner general of the Franciscan order in New Spain. In this year he publishes a book about the Virgin of Aranzazu. It is titled, Paranympho celeste. Historia de la mystica zarza, milagrosa imagen, y prodigioso santuario de Aranzazu.

1690- Juan Antonio de Urrutia y Arana is alderman and head judicial administrator in Mexico.

1691- José de Urrutia, born in Gipuzkoa, accompanies Don Domingo Terán de los Rios into Texas when he is 14. Injured along Texas’ Colorado River, Urrutia is left behind and forced to live among the friendly Kanohatino, Toho, and Xarame Indians for several years. He gains the respect of these tribes and learns their languages. Later, as a Captain in the Spanish Army, he directs the activities of all the nations hostile to the Apache and, under his leadership, conducts several extensive campaigns against the fierce Apache tribes. In addition, Urrutia, through intricate marriage connections, is related to the Oñate and Zaldívar families.

1691- Martín de Jauregui is governor of Tucumán, Argentina until 1696.

1692- By this time, Basques have been in the New World for over two hundred years.

1692- José de Garro is president and captain general of Chile.

1692- Juan and Antonio de Ulibarri (also spelled Uribarri) come to New Mexico with the De Vargas re-conquest of the area.

1694-1701- Marcos de Loyola is a visiting Jesuit in Northern Mexico.

1695- Miguel de Manzábal is Comisario General of Nueva España.
1696- Andrés de Rezábal, a wealthy merchant from Sonora and one of the richest men in the region, is appointed commander of the citadel of Sinaloa. He holds the position until he dies in 1723.

1697- Royal Treasurer of Mexico, Pedro de Labastida, from Alaba, and friar Juan de Urgarte provide the funds for and are guardians of the money used to found the missions in California.

1697-The Spanish obtain domination of the entire Maya region of Central America when the Itza Maya are conquered by Martín de Ursúa y Arizmendi, Spanish governor of Yucatan. However, after the conquest the situation backfires as the Mayans disappear into the jungle and the Spaniards have no food or supplies, no one to convert and no slaves to take. In 1709 Ursúa will become Governor of the Philippines.

1697 to 1767- Seventeen missions are built in Baja California. Of the 62 friars who serve the missions, 10 are Basque: José de Echeverría, Juan Bautista de Muguzabal, Juan Manuel de Basaldúa, Sebastián de Sistiaga, Juan Bautista and Agustín de Luyando, Juan and Pedro de Ugarte, Matiás Goñi and Juan Salazar. Five of these friars found Baja missions.

Not listed in this group is Juan Pedro de Iriarte who, starting in 1773, led the Dominicans who took over the old Baja missions from the Franciscans, and Pablo María de Zárate who serves in Baja from 1797 to 1821. Between 1773 and 1836 the Dominicans build eight new missions from Velicatá to San Diego. When the Dominicans take over the Baja missions, it frees the Franciscans to travel north and establish the missions of Alta California.

1698- Andrés de Arriola is commander of the presidio at Pensacola. His actions help limit early French exploration in the Gulf of Mexico. He draws the first map of Pensacola Bay and is convinced its presidio is indefensible.

1698- Juan Urdiñola Yarza is appointed governor of Guaylas in Peru.

1699- Ygnacio Ynchaurrandieta founds a prosperous mercantile company in Mexico City. He has partners, clients and creditors in Cádiz, Seville, Havana, Veracruz and Lima.

1700- Fray Juan de Garaycoecha (Garicochea) is sent to work among the Zuni in New Mexico. His party, including soldiers for protection, pass by El Morro cliff. Felipe de Arellano, part of the accompanying group of soldiers, inscribed the rock twice; once in September and once in December.
Juan de Uribarri

1701- Juan de Uribarri (Ulibarri) carves his name on El Morro in New Mexico. He does so again in 1709.

1701- Esteban de Urizar y Arespacochaga is governor of Tucumán in Argentina. He raises a large army and pacifies the territory and establishes successful missions.

1701- Felipe de Arellano also carves his name at El Morro twice during this year. Translated, the inscriptions read:

I am from the hand of Felipe de Arellano on the 16th of September soldier

On the 12th of December of 1701
Arellano went by on inspection

1702- Fray Juan de Urgarte founds mission San Francisco Javier de Viggé in Baja California. Other influential Basque priests in Mexico during the 1700’s are Mateo Cayetano de Urrutia y Guerrero, Antonio de Velarde y Murga, José Ignacio de Arancibia y Ormaegui, Juan José de Eguiar y Eguren, and Domingo de Aberasturi.

1704- Juan Bautista de Muguzabal (mentioned previously) arrives in what is now Baja California as a soldier. After a short term as head of a mission garrison he decides to become a Jesuit. He serves his noviceship under Juan de Ugarte and becomes a friar. Muguzabal becomes “the first man to pronounce officially his initial religious vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience” in California.

1705- Fray Pedro de Ugarte founds mission San Juan Bautista Malibat in Baja California.

1705- Financed by Nicolás de Arteaga of Mexico City, fray Juan Manuel de Basaldúa founds mission Santa Rosalía de Mulegé in Baja California.

1706- General Juan de Ulibarri (Uribarri) claims Colorado for Spain. He also makes the first recorded crossing of the Arkansas River on July 29, 1706. He is in command of twenty soldiers, twelve settlers and one hundred Indian allies as he goes from Santa Fe to eastern Colorado to successfully rescue enslaved Picuris Indians from the Cuartelejo Apaches. Ulibarrí is Alcalde mayor of Pecos and Galisteo, New Mexico from 1705 to 1710. In the same year, General Ulibarrí is sent by governor Francisco Cuervo y Valdés to locate a suitable site for the settlement of Albuquerque, New Mexico. He locates the site along the Rio Grande River. It is originally known as Villa de Alburquerque de San Francisco Xavier del Bosque, named after the Viceroy of New Spain, the Duke of Alburquerque. Ulibarri places the first thirty-five families (two hundred fifty-two people) on their lands in the villa of Albuquerque.

1708- Pedro de Aguirre, born in Aranaz, Nafarroa to Pedro and María Sagardia de Aguirre, is a Captain in the Spanish army and commander of Presidio del Río Grande del Norte (present day El Paso.). In 1709, Aguirre accompanies two priests, fathers Antonio de San Buenaventura y Olivares and Isidro Félix de Espinosa, on what is referred to as the Espina-Olivares-Aguirre Expedition to what is now Texas’ Colorado River. On April 13 they arrive at the site of what is now San Antonio and name the nearby springs San Pedro Springs and the river, San Antonio de Padua. The expedition increases familiarity with Texas and gives a favorable impression of the lands along the San Antonio River to help encourage further settlement.

1710- Oidore of Guadalajara is Fernando de Urrutia.

1710- Joaquín Fermín Echauri, from Nafarroa, establishes an encomienda covering more than three hundred and sixty thousand acres near Guadalajara.

1711- Antonio de Soloaga is archbishop of Lima, Peru.

1712- Juan Bautista de Anssa comes to the New World. His son, of the same name, spells his name Anza. For simplicity, “Anza” will be the spelling used in this chronology as it is the spelling favored by the premier Anza historian, Donald Garate.

1712- Gabriel de Arregui is bishop of Buenos Aires.

1714- Basque mariners from Lapurdi are so numerous on the Canadian coasts of Labrador and the west coast of Newfoundland and so steady in their work that the King of France names an officer responsible for their security. From 1714 to 1716 it is François Martel de Berhouague. He is the son of Raymond Martel de Berhouague, a native of Labastide-Clairence. In the 1720’s it is Jean Gatin. From 1753 to 1758 it is Joseph Cadet and Joseph Caillabet. All through the history of New France (Eastern Canada) Basque fishermen serve as the basis of Canadian enterprise. However, tradesmen other than fishermen are also prominent. These include, but are not limited to, Martin Cheniqui, carpenter, Michel d’Irrumberry de Salaberry, naval captain, Leon Roussey, transatlantic navigator and colonial pirate, Dominque Daguerre, rope maker and Pierre Bidegaré, a tanner. Also prominent are the Tubide and Bastarache families.
1714- Antonio de Soloaga y Gil is named archbishop of the city of Lima, Peru.

1715- Although Indian revolts make the situation difficult, Fray Gregorio Osorio and Fray Juan Antonio García attempt to establish a mission at La Junta de los Rios, Texas.

1715- Fray Francisco de Yrazábal is sent to Zuni in May to relieve Garaycoechea. Yrazábal urges Governor Martínez to reduce the Hopi into submission by starvation.

1716- María Antonia Longoria becomes one of the first European women to enter Texas.

1718- One of the mining inspectors of the Aguaje region of Mexico is Miguel de Arriola.

1718- Juan de Uria owns one of the two silver mines operating at El Real y Minas de Soledad. Pedro de Alday owns one of the two smelters operating in neighboring Banamichi.

1718-1719- Several Basques own the mines of Aguaje, Tetuachi and Basochuca, Sonora. Among them are Martín de Ibarburu, Francisco de Aldaniz, Francisco Barcelona, José Goicoechea, Antonio Miranda, Juan Berroeta, Agustín de Vildósola and Juan Bautista de Anza. As Basque historian Donald Garate says, “As was typical of those early frontier mining camps, a disproportionate number...of those in residence were Basque.”

In the 1700’s the “richest man in Mexico” is José de Laborda. Laborda rediscovers silver in Taxco in 1716 and mines it for 50 years. At the time, he is considered to be the most knowledgeable miner in the world. Pedro Felipe de Anza, Juan Bautista de Anza II’s godfather, is Laborda’s principal partner.

1719- When José de Azlor y Virto de Vera, the second Marqués de San Miguel de Aguayo, is appointed governor and captain general of the provinces of Coahuila and Texas he offers to drive the French from New Spain. In 1720 he receives a commission from the Viceroy of Mexico to attempt to do so by reoccupying the East Texas mission and presidio abandoned by Spain during the French invasion of Texas the year before. Aguayo accepts the commission and finances the expedition himself. This is possible because his wife, Ignacia Xaviera de Echevers y Valdez, great-great-granddaughter of Francisco de Urdiñola, is heir to the huge Urdiñola fortune. When they marry she is one of the wealthiest widows in New Spain. They live on the gigantic Urdiñola hacienda, Patos, which, mentioned before, covers half of the province of Coahuila. (It is through Ignacia and her mother, Francisca de Valdes Alceaga y Urdiñola, who was married to Don Agustín de Echevers, that the Marqués de Aguayo title is transmitted to Azlor. Don Agustín received the title for heroics on the frontier of Nueva Viscaya.)

When Azlor enters Texas in 1720 the province has only one presidio and two missions, one of which he had established only a few months previously. When Azlor leaves
Texas, two years later, there are four presidios and ten missions. The second Marqués de San Miguel de Aguayo, using his Basque wife’s family fortune, solidifies Spain’s claim to Texas so that the French never again challenge it. Azlor dies in 1734, one year after his wife, and both are buried at Mission Santa María, in Parras. This is the same mission at which his wife’s great-great-grandfather, Francisco de Urdiñola, established the New World’s first commercial winery in 1593.

1720- Fray Juan de Urgarte founds mission Nuestra Señora del Pilar de La Paz Airapi in Baja California.

1720- Pedro de Villasur leads a small group of veteran New Mexico soldiers to search for Frenchmen believed to be living among the Pawnee Indians. He cuts across the corner of present day southeast Colorado, northwest Kansas and into Nebraska. On August 20, at the junction of the Platte and Loup rivers Pawnee and Oto Indians ambush the party and kill most of the Spaniards including Villasur. Jean L’Archeveque (Juan de Archibeque) mentioned earlier, who was along as a translator and emissary, is also killed. He is left unburied on the bank of one of the rivers.

1720- Future Governor of Sinaloa and Sonora, Agustín de Vildósola, owns and works mines in the Tetuachi, Rosalia and Arizipe regions. In 1722 he is living in Real de Minas de San Juan Bautista, the capitol city of Sonora.

1720- Juan de Echagoyan is a Jesuit priest in Sonora.

1720- On February 23 Martín Alday, former Captain at Pasaje, is made Governor of Nueva Vizcaya. He names José Zubiate, a general in the Spanish army and Sonoran resident, his Lieutenant Governor.

1722- From 1710 to 1722 there are at least eight Basque captains at the nine presidios in Sonora. They are: Captain Martín de Alday at Pasaje, Joseph de Beasoain at San Francisco de los Conchos, Captain Juan Bautista de Leizala at San Pedro de Gallo, Captain José de Barrotaran at Santiago de Mapimí, Mathias de Leon y Herrera at Santiago de Mapimí, Captain Bentura de Álvarez y Zubialdea at Cerrogordo, Captain José de Zubiate at San Bartolomé and General and governor Don Andrés de Rezabal at Sinaloa.

1722- Juan Bautista de Anza begins his military career in the cavalry at Janos presidio in Sonora as its alférez.
intense. The frontier area was initially populated at these widespread presidios and missions and was connected by a network of fairly primitive trails. As shown, Basque military personnel and priests administered many of these outposts.)

1722-1726- Julio Domingo Berroeta is an influential merchant at Baviácora, Sonora. In a letter to Cristóbal de Cañas, minister at Arispe, he outlines the far-reaching illegal activities of the petty tyrant Don Gregorio Alvarez Tuñón y Quirós, captain for life of the presidio of Fronteras. The charges include dereliction of duty as Alvarez does not live at the presidio but at his mine in Jamaica, Sonora and he uses his soldiers as miners and mule packers neglecting the protection of the presidio. Later, as most of the prominent residents of Fronteras and Sonora are Basques, it nearly becomes an ethnic struggle between the Spaniard Alvarez and the Basques. According to historian Garate, military commanders Martín de Alday, Martín de Ibarburu, José de Zubiate and Andrés de Rezabal, with the help of Juan Bautista de Anza, Joseph de Goicoechea and other Basques including the Aguirres, Arvizus, Echaves, Miranda, Madraz y Velasco, Mondragon, Oro, Ozaeta Gallaiztegui, Peña, Peralta, Salazar, San Juan de Santa Cruz, Vildósola and Zubiate unite to force the removal of the corrupt Don Gregorio. It is Rezabal acting on orders from Governor Alday, who arrests Alvarez and transports him to Mexico City.

1723- Jesuit priests Miranda and Irazábel enter Moqui (Hopi) territory in New Mexico.

1724- José de Armendáriz y Peruena becomes viceroy of Peru. He is known as an honest politician who fights fraud and corruption in the government. He also reforms the Royal Treasury and the tax office. In 1736 he retires from office and returns to Spain to become Captain of the King’s Guard. He dies in 1740.

1726- Lieutenant at Janos, Juan Bautista de Anza becomes interim Captain at Fronteras, replacing the corrupt Don Gregorio Alvarez Tuñón y Quirós. By this time, Anza is a well-known and respected military man and nobleman and his appointment has an immediate and positive effect on the soldiers posted there.

1726- Bruno Mauricio de Zabala founds Montevideo, the capitol of Uruguay.

1726- Don Francisco Ugarte is Royal Treasurer in Mexico City.

1726- Bruno Mauricio de Zabala founds Montevideo, Uruguay.

1728- Juan Bautista de Anza begins acquiring livestock ranches. The first is Guevavi ranch near Guevavi mission. It is the first working livestock ranch in what is now Arizona. It remains a working ranch for over 250 years.

1728- Friars Sebastián de Sistiaga and Juan Bautista de Luyendo found mission San Ignacio Kadakaamán in Baja California. The construction is financed with Luyendo’s family inheritance of 10,000 pesos.
1728- The Real Compania Guipuzcoana de Caracas is formed by a group of merchants in Guipuzkoa dealing with the Caracas province in Venezuela. It controls a monopoly in the trade of cacao, precious metals, sugar and leather. By 1750 the company has twelve large ocean-going ships, nineteen coastal vessels with twenty-five hundred crewmen carrying twenty-five hundred tons of freight each year in both directions.

1728- Basque governor of Nueva Viscaya, Ignacio Francisco de Barrutia, appoints Agustín de Vildósola militia captain for all of Sonora.

1729- The King of Spain appoints Juan Bautista de Anza permanent Captain at Fronteras. Fronteras is also known as the Royal Presidio of Santa Rosa de Corodéguachi.

1730- Juan de Arregui is bishop of Buenos Aires.

1730 - One of the most important and influential financial and social organizations in the New World is founded in Mexico City. It is called the Confraternity of Our Lady of Aránzazu and it provides for a wide range of social and charitable activities. In addition, it fills all the functions of a banking or financial institution. Among its Basque members are: Francisco Javier de Gamboa, José Francisco de Uribe, Francisco Fagoaga Iragorri, Juan de Castañiza, Francisco Fagoaga Arosqueta, Antonio de Bassoco, General Francisco de Echeveste, Manuel de Aldaco, José Padilla Estrada, Ambrosio de Meabe, Miguel de Amozarrain, José de Gárate, Pedro Negrete, José Dávalos Espinosa, the archbishop of Mexico Juan Antonio de Vizarrón y Equiarreta and the future archbishop of Mexico from 1752-1763, Juan José Eguíara y Eguren.

1730- Juan Antonio de Vizarrón y Equiarreta is Archbishop of Mexico.

1730- Juan Francisco de Iramategui, from Ondarroa, Bizkaia becomes wealthy from his mining ventures in the Guanajuato area of Mexico.

1730- In the 1730’s Juan Bautista de Anza acquires additional ranches in the Pimería Alta region. These are ranchos San Mateo, Sicurisuta and Sópori. Sópori ranch is still an operating ranch to this day.

1730- Fray Francisco de Archundi attempts to convert the Moqui with little success.

1732- Oidore of Guadalajara is Miguel Tomás de Lugo y Arrieta.
1732-1739- José Echeverría is a visiting Jesuit in Northern Mexico.

1733- Captain José de Urrutia, mentioned before as living with Indians, is commander of the presidio of San Antonio de Bexar, Texas. His residence is the Comandancia that is known today as the Spanish Governors’ Palace in San Antonio. Urrutia had forty years’ experience with the Indians in Coahuila, Nuevo León and Texas and was probably the best informed of all Spaniards on Indian affairs in Texas.

1735- Francisco Antonio González de Echavarrryy Ugarte is named judge of the High Court of Mexico City.

ARIZONA
For many years, citizens, politicians, and historians have debated the origin of the word naming the 48th state, “Arizona.” Some claimed it was an Indian word with various meanings while others said it was probably of Spanish origin. However:
In 1736, at a site 17 miles south of the present U.S. border, a unique silver deposit was discovered in the province of Sonora, Mexico. Because the area had been almost totally settled by Basque frontiersmen and ranchers, a tiny settlement close by the discovery location had a Basque name, ariz ona, or “good oak.” In 1939 historian Herbert E. Bolton, in his book Outpost of Empire: The Story of the Founding of San Francisco, mentions the connection of the discovery site to the naming of Arizona but he does not make the Basque language connection. William A. Douglass first writes of the Basque origins of the word in the December 1979 issue of Names. The article is titled, “On the Naming of Arizona.”
In his book, Juan Bautista de Anza, Basque Explorer in the New World, 1693-1740, Arizona historian Donald Garate devotes almost an entire chapter developing the foundation for the Basque origin for the name of the state of Arizona. Garate is also the author of “Who Named Arizona? The Basque Connection” published in the spring 1999 edition of The Journal of Arizona History, and “Arizona (Nev Arizonac)” plus several other papers and articles that virtually prove the Basque origin of the name.

In addition, because of Garate’s work, The Arizona Historical Society’s website now answers the question, “What does the name Arizona mean?” in this manner:
“Many answers have been posed for this question. Some suggested that it came from “arid zone,” but much of Arizona is not arid, and Spanish grammar would have dictated “Zona Arida,” putting the adjective last. The next suggestion attributed it to an O’odham Indian phrase, “Ali Shonac” meaning shallow, brackish water or spring. However, recent writings present the best cause for the Basque phrase “Aritz ona[c]” meaning the good oak tree or trees. The name was first applied to a huge silver discovery southwest of modern day Nogales, Arizona, an area where oak trees grow. The fact that there are several more areas with the same name in Central and South America lend the most credence to the Basque origin.” (Emphasis added.) Garate reports that there are three villages in Brazil, a river and village in Honduras and a town in Argentina, all named “Arizona.”
Among the Basques Garate lists who were involved in the ariz ona site and the silver discovery there are:

José Fermin de Almazán, discoverer of a slab of silver weighing almost a ton;
Juan Bautista de Anza, born in Hernani, Gipuzkoa, who had to keep the peace at the discovery site and try and come to a fair settlement regarding the actual discoverers and how to distribute the silver among all the claimants.
Pedro Felipe de Anza, born in San Sebastián, Gipuzkoa, Juan Bautista de Anza’s first cousin and godfather of Juan Bautista de Anza II;
Agustín de Aresti, lawyer from Mexico City;
Juan de Echagoyen, Mexican-born Basque missionary;
Francisco Antonio Echevarri, oidor (judge) of the Real Acuerdo;
Francisco de Garduño, statement witness;

Tomas de Garnica, arriero (mule packer);
Francisco de Garrastegui, alcalde mayor of Sonora;

Domingo de Gomendio Urrutia, alcalde ordinario of Mexico City;

José de Gorraez, recorder (Escribano mayor de governación y guerra) of the discovery in Mexico City;
Blas de Gortazar, accountant for Agustín de Vildósola;
Juan Domingo de Guraya;
José de Leiva, early arriver at silver site;
Francisco de Longoria, filed the first silver claim in the ariz ona area and later became Lieutenant Governor of Sonora;
Luis de Mendivil, merchant and miner;
José de Mesa, one of earliest prospectors on the site (Previously, his entire family had been killed in an Apache raid);
Francisco Xavier de Miranda, Sonora militia captain and mining expert;
Antonio Bautista de Morueta, witness;
Martin de Murrieta, teniente general of Sonora and Ostimuri from 1725 to 1727;

José de Olave, Anza’s deputy justicia mayor for the San Luis Valley;
José de Osorio, scribe;

Gabriel de Prudhom Butron y Mujica, alcalde mayor of Sonora from July 1727 to July 1735;
Francisco Perez Serrano, possibly one of the original Basque founders of the area. He is the father of Ana Maria Perez Serrano, wife of Juan Bautista de Anza II.

Bernardo de Urrea, Anza’s deputy justicia mayor and also one of the first ariz ona area residents. He probably named the ariz ona ranch;
José de Usarraga, mining expert appointed by Anza;
José Joaquin de Usarraga, son of José de Usarraga;
José de Veitia, oidor of the Real Acuerdo;
Lorenzo de Velasco discovered a one and one half ton slab of silver near ariz ona and parlayed it into the largest ranching operation in Sonora at the time;
Agustín de Vildósola, born in Billaro, Bizkaia in 1700, had large mining interests and was second governor of Sonora, 1741-1748;
Juan Antonio de Vizarrón y Equiarreta, Archbishop of Mexico and Viceroy of Nueva España 1734-1740; and Juan José de Zarasua, escribano real in Mexico City.

Basque scholar and historian Garate makes a compelling argument for the Basque origin of the word Arizona and, as he states in his book: “Although the choice of the name fell to a man named William Claude Jones, he would have never heard of the word had it not been for Juan Bautista de Anza. In that sense, Anza is responsible for the name that the forty-eighth state bears. Had he not chosen to hold his court of inquiry at Bernardo Urrea’s house located at the place called Arizona…hardly anyone would have heard of it. It would just be the sleepy little ranch that it still is today, located at the bottom of a deep canyon in northern Sonora, about ten air miles south of the present international border—south of a state that would undoubtedly have been named something else.” (Emphasis added.) Historians are very careful when examining and accepting changes regarding long-held beliefs. However, more and more individuals in academia and the field of history are embracing Garate’s findings regarding the naming of Arizona. As another example, Arizona State Historian Marshall Trimble also now agrees with Garate’s conclusions regarding the origin of the name.

Garate’s book on Anza is excellent reading and he is currently working on a second volume on Anza II. Donald Garate is very involved in research into and preservation of the Spanish history of both Arizona and Sonora, Mexico, and has brought attention to new information concerning the Basque influence in Southwest and U.S. history. He is chief of interpretation and a historian at Tumacácori National Historical Park in Arizona, north of Nogales.

The Arizona episode is another example of how Basques attracted each other to their endeavors and activities and how the northern frontier of Mexico was populated by a large number of Basques. Language, family, culture and loyalty to one another were and, in most cases still are, of extreme importance to Basques.

José Diaz del Carpio
1733- Captain José Diaz del Carpio, from Gamarra, Alaba, is made commander of Jano presidio in Sonora.

1734- Fernández de Jáuregui y Urrutia is named captain general of Nuevo León.
1734-1740- Juan Antonio de Vizarrón y Eguiarreta is Viceroy of Mexico.

1735- Francisco de Garrastegui is alcalde mayor of Sonora and opens the borders of Sonora to Anza for further exploration. José de Mesa and Francisco de Longoria sue Garrastegui as they wish to be commissioned to make the northern explorations.

1735- Francisco de Ersilbengoa y Orbezu is Accountant of Public Review Board of Lima, Peru.

1735- Francisco Antonio González de Echavarry y Ugarte, from Gasteiz, is judge of the High Court of Mexico City. After holding this position for thirty years, he is appointed Mexico City’s governor and captain general.

1736- Michel de Salaberry is a successful commercial shipper between Quebec and France. He is a naval officer and a ship owner from the Irumberry family. He plays a major role in creating strong ties between New France and France.

1736- José Antonio Manso de Velasco y Sánchez de Samaniego is named governor and captain general of Chile.

1736- José de Echevarria is Father Visitor of the missions in Sonora. At the same time, fray Juan de Echagoyen is a missionary at Baviácora.

1737- Martín de Elizacochea, born in Azpilkueta, Nafarroa, becomes Bishop of Durango, Kingdom of Nueva Vizcaya, Mexico. (He had also been dean and chancellor of the University of Mexico and bishop of Cuba and Michoacán.) Pedro de Echenique and Juan Ignacio de Arrasain, fellow Nafarroans, are his personal secretary and confessor, respectively. Elizacochea is addressed as, “Doctor don Martín de Elizacochea, bishop of Durango, the kingdom of Nueva Viscaya, its confines, and the provinces of New Mexico, Tarahumara, Sonora, Sinaloa, Pimas, Moqui, and of His Majesty’s Council.”
Juan Bautista de Anza, the Elder

1736- Juan Bautista de Anza II is born on July 7 in the village of Cuquiárrachi, Sonora.

1737- Martín de Elizacoechea and his confessor, Arrasain, pass the cliffs of El Morro in New Mexico and leave the following inscriptions, translated from the Spanish:

The 28th day of September of the year 1737
there arrived here the very illustrious Señor Doctor Don Martín de Elizacoechea Bishop of Durango and on the 29th went on to Zuni

The 28th day of September of the year 1737
There arrived here the Bachelor [of Arts] Don Juan Ignacio de Arrasain

1737- Juan Bautista de Anza, the Elder, Chief Justice of Sonora, petitions Viceroy and Archbishop Juan Antonio de Vizarrón y Equiarreta to open a land route from Sonora to Alta California.

1737- Fray José de Arlegui publishes his La Crónica de la Provincia de N.S.P.S. Francisco de Zacatecas. It is a fanciful, error-filled history of the province of Nueva Leon which causes confusion and the spread of misinformation that is not resolved until modern research proves its inconsistencies.

1739- The eighteen-century marks extensive economic growth in Cuba. The crowning event is when El Real Compania de Comercio de la Habana (The Royal Company of Commerce of Havana) is formed. The company is created with Basque capital and holds monopolies on Havana’s foreign commerce in tobacco, sugar, leather, and shipyards for many years. It is lead by Martín de Arostegui Larrea. Among his business contacts and associates in Cuba and Europe are: José de Iturrigaray, Miguel Antonio de Zuazábar, Juan Bautista de Zuazábar, Francisco de Aldecoa, Agustín de Aldecoa, Andrés de Otamendi, Bernardo de Goicoa and Luis Ibarra. Unfortunately, Arostegui actually concentrates on trading slaves and selling tobacco for his own personal gain to the British American colonies rather than to Spain. His business partners learn of his deeds and in 1752 he is arrested and removed from the company.
However, almost all commerce to and from the New World passes through Havana. Historian Pastor states that, “Cuba’s eighteenth-century could be characterized, especially qualitatively, as a period of Basque preeminence.” Basques constitute an influential and powerful pressure group in the island’s social, economic, and cultural events. Domingo de Lizundia y Odra de Echeverría, from Guipuzkoa, is treasurer of the Royal Tobacco Income. His daughter marries Arban brigadier Matías de Armona y Murga. José de Lizundía, Domingo’s brother, and a member of the Council of His Majesty in the Head Accountants’ Office and administrator general of royal income, marries into the family of Bizkaian José de Beitia y Rentería, the marquis of Real Socorro. It is one of the wealthiest and most influential Basque families in Cuba.

1739- José de Urrutia, mentioned previously, leads a campaign against the Apache in what is now known as the Texas Hill Country and discovers Bandera Pass. This campaign would bring a short period of peace and stability to the area. Urrutia has many holdings in Coahulia and Texas He dies in San Antonio on July 16, 1741. (Urrutia had great respect for the abilities of the Apache.)

1740- Toribio Urrutia, son of José, takes command of San Antonio for his ailing father. Other Basques in San Antonio at the time are: Fernando de Arocha, José de Arocha, José Gil de Leyola, José María Oliberrí, Manuel Urrutia and José María Urrutia.

1740- While returning home from patrol on May 9, Juan Bautista de Anza, the Elder, Sonoran hero and Captain of the royal presidio of Fronteras, is killed by arrows from a lightning-quick Apache ambush. His burial place is unknown.

(When Anza became captain of the presidio at Fronteras he was responsible for protecting a huge area of more than 100,000 square miles. This was more than ten times larger than the entire Basque Country and he had only 50 soldiers to patrol it with. One-quarter to one-third of the area was in what is now Arizona and it was from this section of the territory that the Apache staged most of their raids into lower Sonora.)

Anza’s accomplishments are far too numerous to mention here. Please see Donald Garate’s “Juan Bautista de Anza, Basque Explorer in the New World, 1693-1740.”

According to historian Garate, the Apache attacked somewhere in the Pimería Alta (southern Arizona and northern Sonora) almost every month during the full moon. They used the darkness of the night for cover and the light of the moon for swift travel.

1740- On May 12 José Diaz Del Carpio, captain of the Jano presidio, leads an attack on a fairly large group of Apache warriors as revenge over the killing of Anza. He kills 13 and takes another 14 as prisoners. It is not known if the Indians he killed were, in fact, responsible for Anza’s death.

(The illustration by Frederick Remington on the front page of this document depicts the armor worn by the Spanish in the early years of conquest. By the late 1600’s and early 1700’s the soldiers had switched to layers of leather on long coats to replace the metallic body armor. They also carried a leather shield and were armed with firearms and lances.)
They wore flat, broad hats to replace the helmets of earlier years. Both forms of protection were heavy and hot. According to Garate, each soldier on the frontier was also required to have ten horses and one pack mule. Officers were often required to have as many as fifteen horses and a pack mule.

1740- In August, Agustín de Vildósola defeats a force of more than 6,000 rebelling Indians in Sonora. In 1741 Vildósola, who had primarily been a mining developer in northern Mexico since the early 1720s, becomes the second governor of Sonora.

1741-1774- Cristóbal de Leuro y Dudagoitia is accountant of High Tribunal of Fiscal Inspection in Peru.

1741- Blas de Lezo y Olavarrieta, after very successful terms in the French and Spanish navy, is best known for his leadership as Commander General of Cartagena, Columbia. The British attack Cartagena in 1741 with one of the largest war fleets in history. The Spanish, greatly outnumbered prevail under Lezo’s leadership after a vicious battle that lasts sixty-seven days. His defeat of the British assures the preservation of the Spanish Empire in the Americas. He dies from the plague, caused by the large numbers of unburied corpses.

1741- Manuel Sáenz y Martínez de Arlueca is treasurer of the Royal banks of Lima, Peru.

1742- By this time, Basques have been in the New World for over two hundred and fifty years.

1742- Fray José Buzeta introduces potable water to Guadalajara.

1743- Joaquín Antonio Pérez de Uriondo y Martínez de Murguía is justice of the High Court of Charcas, Peru and superintendent of the Potosí mines.

1744- José Antonio Manso de Velasco y Sánchez de Samaniego, previously mentioned is named viceroy of Peru.
1744-1784- Mateo de Amusquibar y Ochoa de Recalde and Juan Ignacio de Obiaga are Inquisitors of the Holy Office of Peru.

1745- Fray Pedro Yrigoyen has success with the conversion of the Moqui.

1747- Agustín de Vildósola establishes the presidio of Pitic in northern Sonora. In the same year, Basque friars Francisco Xavier de Anaya, Agustín de Arriola and Gabriel de Urrutia are also serving in the area.

1747- Gabriel Antonio de Vildósola, from Elejabeitia, Bizkaia and a distant relative of Agustín, is living in the Pimería Alta region of northern Sonora at the royal mining town of Real de Basochuca. There, on February 1, he marries Josefina Gregoria Juaquina de Anza, the fourteen-year old daughter of Juan Bautista de Anza, the Elder.

1749- Three missions are established on the San Gabriel River in Texas. Fray Juan José Ganzabal is the head of Mission San Ildofonso. In 1751 Captain Felipe de Rábago y Terán is appointed commandant of the nearby presidio of San Francisco Xavier de Gigedo. Rábago has an affair with the wife of soldier Juan José Ceballos. Ganzabal delivers a decree of excommunication to Rábago. On May 11, 1752 gunshots and arrows kill Ganzabal and Ceballos. The attack was certainly instigated by Rábago but was blamed on Indians.

1749-1756- Francisco de Urrizmendi y Aramendi is head guard at the port of Callao, Peru.

1750-1753- Pedro del Villar y Zubiaur is Consul of Lima, Peru.

1751- Juan Bautista de Anza II joins the Spanish militia at the age of 15. His brother-in-law, Gabriel Antonio de Vildósola, becomes his military mentor.
1751- In November, the Pima Indians in Sonora begin a bloody revolt against every outpost, mission and ranch in the area. Scores of Spanish men, women and children are killed, in addition to friendly Indians. Pima chief Captain-General Luís Oacicagigua leads the revolt.

1751- Led by Lieutenant Bernardo de Urrea, the Spanish decisively defeat Pima rebels at Aribaca.

1752- Captain José Diaz del Carpio sends a note to Pima chief Oacicagigua asking him to surrender. Oacicagigua consents and walks alone into Tubac to present himself to Del Carpio. The Pima revolt is over. If Oacicagigua had not surrendered, the Spanish retaliation would have been the bloody extermination of the Pima.

1752- Juan Tomás de Beldarrain, commander of the Company of Sinaloa, is made the first commander of the Royal Fort of St. Ignatius at Tubac in what is now Arizona.

1752- Don Bernardo de Urrea, Captain of the Altar presidio puts down a rebellion by the Pimas Altas Indians. As a result the Pimas settle down at the neighboring missions.

1752- Ignace-Michel-Louis Antoine d’Irumberry de Salaberry is born in Quebec. Son of previously mentioned Michele de Salaberry, Ignace fights against the Americans in the Battle of Saratoga, New York in 1777.

1752- Manuel de Aldaco, the leading silver banker of his day and Ambrosio de Meave and Francisco de Echeveste, both successful merchants, found El Colegio de San Ignacio de Mexico. Know as the Colegio de las Vizcaínas, it is a school for orphan Basque girls.

1753-1754 Captain Bernardo de Urrea is the founding commandant of the presidio of Altar, Sonora. Later, his sons and their descendents become leaders in the province. Mariano de Urrea, Bernardo’s grandson, is commandant of Altar from 1805 to 1811 and Mariano’s son, José de Urrea, Bernardo’s great grandson, becomes a notable general to be mentioned later.

1754- Gabriel Antonio de Vildósola is appointed captain of the Presidio of Fronteras. Basque Francisco Bustamante will also command Fronteras.

1754-1757- Jerónimo de Calatayud is Consul of Lima, Peru.

1755- On May 15, captain in charge Tomás de la Barrera y Gallardo, his wife Doña Catalina de Uribe, their nine children and seven servants lead three other families to settle Laredo.
1756- Don Juan Antonio de Urrutia y Arana is a powerful and wealthy noble and patron of the arts in eighteenth century Queretaro, Mexico. In Queretaro he is also responsible for the building of an aqueduct to bring drinking water to the city from nearby springs. It is composed of seventy-four stone arches that run almost a mile and in places are over seventy feet high.

1756- Gabriel Vildósola leads soldiers against the Gila Apache in an effort to secure a safe route between Sonora and Santa Fe.

1756- Anza II, age 20, is made cavalry lieutenant at Fronteras. The Apache will wound him on two different occasions.

1757-1759- Ignacio de Eloa is Consul of Lima, Peru.

1758- José Antonio de Cuervo purchases the estancia, Confradía de los Animas, from Vincente de Saldivar. Among other things, Saldivar has been producing mezcal at the location for years. Cuervo becomes the first licensed producer of mezcal tequila. His descendent, José María Guadalupe Cuervo, uses the land to build a tequila distillery. In 1900, José Cuervo Labastida changes the name of the tequila brand to “José Cuervo.”

1758- Joachin de Usarraga is ensign in charge of the Pimería Alta Company.

1759- On September 7 Juan Tomás de Beldarrain, first Captain of Tubac presidio in Arizona, dies from wounds caused by a poisoned Seri Indian arrow. He is buried at Mission Guevavi, now only eroding mounds of adobe. Governor Juan de Mendoza appoints Juan Bautista de Anza, II, to take his place. (An interesting note provided by historian Garate is that Juan Tomás de Beldarrain and Ambrosio de Meave, the financier who controlled the money for all of Nueva España in the last quarter of the 18th century, were born and raised directly across the street from each other in Durango, Bizkaia.)

José Antonio de Vildósola

1759- José Antonio de Vildósola, Gabriel’s nephew, takes Anza’s place as lieutenant at Fronteras. His arrival date in Mexico from the Basque Country is unknown.
1760- Governor Mendoza is struck in the throat by a poisoned Seri arrow near Saracachi, Sonora. He is brought back to Horcasitas where he dies two days later on November 27.

Life at this time on the northern frontier of Mexico is extremely tenuous. Indians could overrun the tiny settlements in an instant. No one knew when an arrow or a club or spear would end his or her life. Priests living in this wilderness mentioned in letters to each other that they expect to be killed as “God’s will.”

In a 1761 letter to Minister of the Indies Julián de Arriaga, Bishop of Durango Pedro Tamarón y Romeral tells Arriaga that between the years of 1749 and 1763 the Apache kill more than eight hundred people and destroy approximately four million pesos worth of property, all within a two hundred mile radius of Chihuahua. Flourishing cattle ranches, farms and missions are abandoned along with some of the silver mines because the roads used for the transportation of ore and supplies are unsafe.

In his book on Anza, Garate quotes Anza, the Elder, as saying, “With good reason the inhabitants of the province are fearful of seeing themselves destroyed by such a cruel and pernicious enemy. Yet, since it is difficult to know where the Apaches are going to vent their fury next, it is difficult to guard against them.”

Garate states that the Sonoran area was “…one of the wildest, harshest, and least-tamed frontiers of the New World.” However, as in other areas, smallpox and measles epidemics kill many more people in Sonora than all the Apache wars combined.

1760- Francisco Antonio de Echévarri is Viceroy of Mexico.

1760-1764- Domingo de Zaldivar y Pascual is Consul of Lima, Peru.

1760- Fray Joséph Manuel Díaz del Carpio, probably the son of Captain Joséph Díaz del Carpio, former commandant at Terrenate, is the priest at Tubac.

1760’s- José Antonio Aguirre and his bother-in-law Miguel de Pedrorena and three Americans plan and are owners of the city of San Diego.

1760’s-1790’s- José Joaquín Lecuona is treasurer in Mexico for expeditions to Sonora, Nueva Vizcaya, Loreto, San Blas and California.

1760- The first supervisor of the tobacco monopoly in the area of San Blas is Francisco de Urbieta.

1761- Francisco Xavier de Gamboa publishes Commentaries on the Mining Ordinances regarding the technical aspects of mining gold and silver in Mexico.

1761- Juan Francisco Larraín Cerda establishes a shipping company with Diego Portales Irarrázaval and they engage in prolonged trade between Peru and Chile. In Concepción, Francisco de Urrutia Mendiburu is also connected to the merchants of Peru.

1761- On June 24, Juan Bautista de Anza II marries Anna María Pérez Serrano. As is the custom of the day, the marriage needs to be approved by governor of the province who happens to be long-time friend of the Anza family, Bernardo de Urrea.

1761-1776- Antonio de Elexpuru y Larrínaga is secretary to the viceroy of Peru.

1761- José Manuel Díaz del Carpio, son of José Díaz del Carpio, the Janos commander who attempted to avenge Anza II father’s death, serves as military chaplain at Tubac. José Manuel is a brother-in-law of Anna María Pérez Serrano as his brother, Ignacio, is married to a sister of Anza, María Gertrudis de Anza.

1761-1762- Gabriel and José Vildósola, along with Anza II are involved in campaigns against the Seri and Apache in the Gila River area.

1761-1776- Miguel de Arriaga y Gurbista is general director of customs for Peru and Juan de Echevarría y Uriá is general accountant of customs in Peru.

1762-1766- Tomás de la Bodega y Quadra is consul of Lima, Peru.

1763- Luis Antonio Menchaca, grandson of José Urrutia, takes command of San Antonio.

1763- In Mexico City, Juan José de Echeveste is the general director of the tobacco monopoly of Mexico. He establishes factories in Mexico City, Puebla, Orizaba and Oaxaca with a workforce of 12,000. Echeveste is a nephew and heir of General Francisco de Echeveste, a cofounder of the College of the Vizcayans in Mexico City. In 1700 Echeveste is appointed treasurer of the baker’s guild and the crown’s purchasing agent for Baja and Alta California. He travels to Monterey and controls California commerce.

1763- Manuel Aguirre is a visiting Jesuit in Northern Mexico.

1764- Lieutenant Colonel Juan de Ugalde, son of Brigadier General Miguel and Doña Catalina González de Ugalde, is sent to South America where he is Corregidor of Cochabamba, Bolivia until 1772 when he returns to Spain. He will return to the New World as an Indian fighter in 1776.

1764- Second lieutenant Joseph Ramón de Urrutia y De Las Casas, born in Casa de la Mella, Bizkaia, comes to New Spain. He is a trained cartographer and on a 1766-1768 expedition to the northern frontier of New Spain he draws a comprehensive map of the entire area plus 22 plans of various presidios and towns visited during the expedition. (Urrutia’s amazing drawings can be see on the Tumacácori website.) In 1770 he returns to Spain and takes various assignments around the world. He is appointed field marshal and in 1795 he is named captain-general of the armies of Spain. In 1797 he becomes a member of the King’s Supreme Council of War. He dies on March 1, 1803 in Madrid. A full-length portrait of Urrutia by Francisco Goya hangs in the Museo del Prado in Madrid.

1765- Juan Bautista de Anza II makes Joséph Antonio de Huandurraga ensign at Tubac. Huandurraga is hated by the lower ranking soldiers because of his harsh and cruel discipline and his sexual advances towards the married women of the presidio. He did, however, stage a successful defense of Mission San Xavier del Bac, near Tucson, against the Apache while Anza was south on another campaign.

1767- At San Blas de Nayarit, on the Pacific coast of Mexico, a naval base is built to launch new explorations and provision colonies. San Blas is the most important sea base in the North Pacific from 1767 to 1797. The first administrator of the region is Juan de Urrengoechea y Arrinda. The three head ship builders are also Basques, Pedro de Yzaguirre, Francisco Segurola and Manuel de Bastarrechea.

1767- The King of Spain recalls and exports all the Jesuit priests from Nueva España back to Spain. The Franciscans take their place.

1768-1772- In Sonora, Indian outbreaks are numerous and the principal cause for the decline of the province according to one frontier Padre.

1768-1773- Basques Gregorio Amurrio, Pedro Arreguibar, Francisco Echaso, Fermín Lausen, José Murguia, Juan Prestamero and Juan Vizcaíno are among the padres serving the Baja California mission during these five years. All except Arreguibar and Echaso move north to serve the Alta California sites.

1768- In May, General Domingo Elizondo is sent to Sonora from Spain with 1,100 troops to put down uprisings and raids by Seri, Pima, Suaqui and Sibubapa Indians.

1769- General Elizondo leads four divisions against the Seri. Gabriel de Vildósola leads one of the divisions. One of his officers is Ignacio de Urrea of the Altar presidio and Gabriel’s nephew, Antonio, leads the scouts. Juan Bautista de Anza II serves under Elizondo and Miguel Gregorio de Echarri is Elizondo’s supply officer. In April of 1771, after thirty-eight months, the Seri War is abandoned as being far too costly and largely unsuccessful due to the Indians’ effective guerrilla-fighting techniques.

Historian David Weber states: “Spain’s goal, of course, had not been the annihilation of the Indians, but rather their transformation into tax-paying Christians.” However, the continued loss of their territories, native religion and culture, being forced into unpaid labor and the exposure to new diseases made a peaceful transition into the Spanish lifestyle very difficult.

Antonio María Bucareli y Ursúa

1768- Antonio María Bucareli y Ursúa is appointed Governor and Captain General of Cuba. Of Basque descent on his mother’s side he is appointed Viceroy of Nueva España in 1771 and holds the office until he dies on April 19, 1779. He is noted for the prudent and humane administration of his office and, under his leadership, Mexico enjoys greater prosperity and security than most of Spanish America. (Historian Herbert E. Bolton says Bucareli y Ursúa is “…one of the ablest of all the corps of remarkable officials who served New Spain in the later eighteenth century…” ) It is by his earlier order that Felipe de Neve founds the city of Los Angeles, Alta California in 1781.

Jacobo de Ugarte y Loyola

1769- Jacobo de Ugarte y Loyola is appointed governor of Coahuila. Born in Bizkaia, before coming to Mexico he is in fourteen European and African campaigns and spends eight years as governor and military commandant in Peru.

1769- Gaspar de Portola’s expedition into present day California includes friar Juan Viscaíno and Mallorcan friar, Junipero Serra.
1769- On July 16, Father Serra, accompanied by fellow Franciscans Juan Vizcaíno, Fernando Parron and Francisco Gomez blesses the site of Mission San Diego de Alcala, the first mission in Alta California.

1770- Between 1770 and 1794, among the soldiers of Basque descent at San Diego are: Juan Antonio Ibarra, Manuel Bernal, Salvador Carreaga and Pedro Lisalde. At Monterrey at the same time are: Dionisio Bernal, Ignacio Cantua, José María Gongora and Ramon Ibarra.

1770- Wealthy Cuban Basques, Silvestre Abarca y Aznar and Agustín Cramer Mañecas, both originally from Nafarroa, construct the warehouse of the Royal Tobacco Trading Post. It remains one of Havana’s main buildings until the early 20th Century. Many Basques are prominent in the mercantile business of Cuba. Among these are: Sebastián de Arratibel Zafinea, Gabriel Francisco de Ercaizti Goizueta, Francisco Isaac de Mendiola y Múgica, Juan Ignacio Urriza, and Domingo Ugarte Zubiate. Zubiate marries María Jesús Arostegui, the daughter of one of the founders of the Royal Company of Commerce of Havana, Martín de Arostegui Larrea. In addition, Sebastián de Lasa y Irala, from Gipuzkoa, and his son, introduce new types of sugar cane to the island.

1771-1776- It is still very dangerous in northern Mexico. According to historian Alfred Thomas, in Nueva Vizcaya alone, Indians kill 1,963 people, destroy 116 ranches and settlements and take almost 80,000 head of livestock.

1771- José Antonio de Vildósola is made captain of the presidio of Terrenate.

1771- Governor of New Mexico Fermín de Mendinueta negotiates peace with the Comanche. Mendinueta must deal with several different tribes from all sides of the province, all threatening war.

1771- Catalan Friar Francisco Palou is appointed religious leader of the Alta California missions with Basque José Antonio de Murguia as his aide.

1771- Friar Juan José Agorreta serves briefly at mission Tumacácori.

1771-1776- Historian Alfred Thomas states that in Nueva Viscaya Indians killed 1,963 people, depopulated 116 ranches and settlements and stole 77,000 head of livestock.

1772- Three Basques are in charge of Alta California missions: Gregorio Amurrio, San Diego; Fermín Francisco de Lasuén, San Gabriel and Juan Prestamero, San Luis Obispo. Catholic missionaries, including the Basques, bring livestock and many food crops into the areas they settle, which become the basis for future agricultural endeavors.

1772- Domingo de Bonechea Andonaegui, born in Geteria in 1713, makes his first voyage to Tahiti. Sailing from Callao, Peru this is a preliminary trip to try and add Tahiti to the Spanish Empire.
1772- New Mexico governor Pedro Fermín de Mendinueta reports that the Indians of the province are “...harrying it with incessant robberies, attacks and murders...” so that “…in all its regions there is no safe place in which to keep horses or herds of cattle.”

1772- King Carlos III of Spain makes the following statement: “I prohibit the commandant-inspector and the captains of presidios from granting the [Indians of New Spain] peace,” prompting even more violence between the natives and settlers.

1773- In Monterey, Juan de Echeveste, mentioned previously, authors the “New Code for San Blas and Alta California.” He is instrumental in shaping the future Spanish colonization of California.

1773-1777- Joaquín J. de Arrese is Consul of Lima, Peru.

1774- Juan Bautista de Anza, II, receives backing from Basque bankers, financiers and monopolists in Mexico City for expeditions to open a land route from Sonora to Alta California and for the colonization of what is now San Francisco, California. (The expeditions are intended to establish and protect Spanish interests in Alta California from the Russians and British who are gradually moving down the Pacific coast from the north.)

In his paper, “Juan Bautista de Anza, His Ethnic Connections and the Expedition to Alta California,” historian Donald Garate shows that Anza is chosen to make the trek rather than Governors Sastre and Crespo of Sonora or Commander Rivera of California, for several reasons. Among these reasons are his family and ethnic heritage as a criollo of Basque descent and his connections to the powerful political, financial and trade network of Basques in and around Mexico City. Anza is able to secure this political and financial aid, which is largely unavailable to non-Basques.

The powerful Basques in the government include the Viceroy of Mexico Antonio María Bucareli y Ursua, Francisco de Viana of the Royal Audencia of Mexico, Joseph Antonio de Areche, senior fiscal of the Royal Audencia, Domingo de Arangoiti, who takes Areche’s place in the Audencia when Areche is sent to Peru, and Julian de Arriaga, Minister of the Indies, who must approve of and present Anza’s plans to the King of Spain.

Two influential lawyers are also involved in this network. They are previously mentioned Francisco Xavier de Gamboa, a criollo who drew up the rules of government for the College of the Vizcainas and Durango resident Agustín Josef de Echeverría y Orcolaga, a native Basque.

The Council of War must also approve of Anza’s plans. At least half the members of the Council are Basque. They include Bucareli y Ursua, Areche, Juan Chrisostomo de Barroeta, Fernando Mangino and Antonio de Villaurrutia. Villaurrutia is the only criollo, or Mexican-born Basque, the others are Old Country Basques.
Financiers and merchants that are intertwined in this Basque substructure and who are important to Anza are his friend and Sonoran merchant Francisco de Guizamotegui and Juan Bautista de Arosqueta who founded a business that evolves into one of the most powerful economic establishments in all of Nueva España. Arosqueta’s daughter, Josefa, marries Francisco de Fagoaga Iragorri in 1716 and meshes the wealth of these two families together. Fagoaga establishes and owns the Royal Silver Bank of Mexico. After he dies, the Fagoaga brothers, Antonio de Bassoco and their brothers-in-law, the Villaurrutias and Castañizas make up the most powerful colonial establishment in trade, church and law throughout all of Mexico.

Another important businessman is Manuel de Aldaco, who marries Fagoaga’s daughter. According to historian Juan Javier Pescador: “Aldaco’s influence and Basque network extended from northern Spain to the Caribbean islands, New Spain, Central America, and northern New Spain. Basque families such as the Vildosola, Ugarte, Ansa, and Urquidi, among others, who controlled the trade networks and governmental appointments in Sonora, Durango, Chihuahua, New Mexico, and Coahuila, were also deeply connected with the Fagoaga-Aldaco firm throughout the eighteenth century.”

As mentioned earlier, Aldaco is a founder of the College of the Vizcaina’s. He also finances Pedro de Anza, Juan Bautista’s godfather and Jose de Laborda in their huge silver strike in Taxco. Aldaco is an heir to the estate of Francisco de Fagoaga and when Fagoaga dies in 1770 he wills this estate to his son, Aldaco’s brother-in-law, Francisco Manuel de Fagoaga. When Francisco Manuel dies in 1736, his widow assigns Aldaco to manage her estate. Aldaco then assigns management of the Royal Silver Bank and Casa Mercantil de los Fagoaga to Basque Ambrosio de Meave. Meave then has complete control over Mexico’s silver and is, according to Donald Garate, “…probably the single most financially powerful person in all of Nueva España in Anza’s day.” When Meave dies, Basques Manuel Ramón de Goya, Antonio de Bassoco, Juan Jose de Echeveste and Francisco Xavier de Gamboa administer his estate. Echeveste is the purchasing agent for Baja and Alta California and also controls the tobacco, playing card and gunpowder monopolies in Mexico along with Francisco de Urbieita. Echeveste is also the nephew of Francisco de Echeveste, mentioned earlier as a founder of the College of the Vizcaina’s. Garate reports that the Echevestes and Anzas were intermarried in Spain and that the Anzas, Aldacos and Fagoagas came from villages only a few miles apart in the Basque Country and the families knew each other before anyone left Spain for the New World. Many of these influential men are members of the Confraternity of Our Lady of Aránzazu.

As Garate has shown, due to Anza’s Basque heritage and connections, he had a substantial edge over anyone else trying to obtain financing and political backing for the establishment of the route into Alta California and the settling of Monterey.
The portrait of Anza II shown hangs in the Palace of the Governors’ Museum in Santa Fe. It was believed to have been painted in life in 1774 by Franciscan Friar Orci during Anza’s stay in Mexico City, between his expeditions to California. Historian Ron Kessler notes, however, that in the summer of 2000 the painting was taken to the National Museum of History in Mexico City for analysis. Experts determined that the painting was not an original painting and that it had been painted after the turn of the twentieth century.

At the time of Anza’s first expedition, Alta California’s Spanish settlements consists of two small military posts; El Presidio Real de San Diego and El Presidio Real de San Carlos de Monterey, plus five missions; San Diego de Alcalá, San Carlos Borromeo de Carmelo, San Antonio de Padua, San Gabriel Arcángel and San Luis Obispo de Tolosa. Basques are in charge of three of these missions: Gregorio Amurrio at San Diego, Fermín Francisco de Lasuén at San Gabriel and Juan Prestamero at San Luis Obispo. In addition, José Antonio de Murguía is a priest at Carmel and Pablo de Mugartegi is a priest at San Luis Obispo. At the time there are less than 100 Europeans in all of Alta California.

On his first exploratory trip, Anza leaves Tubac on January 9, 1774 with a small party of soldiers, mule packers, two friars, a few assorted tradesmen and Sebastian Tarabal, a Baja Indian who had just walked to Sonora from Mission San Gabriel, Alta California. The group starts out across the desert headed for California. It is a difficult experience and in one instance the group wanders through and around sand dunes for almost a month. Eventually, the 25 or so remaining members of the party (Anza had sent several back towards Sonora during the time in the dunes) arrive at Mission San Gabriel on March 22, 74 days after leaving Tubac. After he visits Monterey, Anza returns to Tubac on May 26, 1774. He had covered more than 2,000 miles on the round trip. He immediately begins making plans for another colonizing expedition and a return to Monterey.
1774- Bernardo de Urrea is captain at Altar presidio and helps replace some of the worn horses for Anza on his trek west.

1774-1775- Julián de Arriaga, Minister of the Indies, sends six new officials to the port of San Blas, Mexico. Three are Basque, Bruno de Hezeta y Dudagoitia, from Bilbao, Juan Francisco la Bodega y Quadra, born in Peru and Ignacio de Arteaga. In 1775, Hezeta and Bodega sail from San Blas to Alaska establishing the northernmost claim of sovereignty for Spain. Bodega Bay north of San Francisco is named on this expedition and Hezeta discovers the mouth of the Columbia River. Again, the intent of this expedition is to slow or stop the English and Russians’ advance on California. (Hezeta joined the Spanish navy at age 14 and, later in his career he captained a Manila galleon between the Philippines and Mexico. He then returned to Spain and fought in naval battles against the French and British.)

As a result of their privileged economic positions, of some of the Basques in Nueva España began forming ranks of nobility as in no other area of the New World. Among these are the Castañizas, the Bassocos, the Villaurrutias, the Iturbides and the Fagoagas. Others are: Miguel de Berrio y Saldivar, Francisco José de Landeta y Urtuzastegui, Pedro de Garrastegui y Oleaga, Francisco Javier Vasconcelos Berruecos y Cuelleno, Vincente Manuel de Sardaneta y Lagazpi and Rodrigo de Vivero y Aberrucia.

1775- On July 17, Domingo de Eyzaguirre y Arechavala is born in Chile. He is the son of Domingo Eyzaguirre Escutasolo and María Rosa de Aretxabala y Alday and becomes one of the premier Chilean politicians and philanthropists.

1775- Fray Antonio de Arriquibar serves at mission Tumacácori until 1780. During that time another Basque priest, Joaquín Antonio Belarde, aids his ministry.

1775- Padres Fermín Francisco de Lasuén, Gregorio Amurrio and another Basque, Pablo de Mugartegui, make a first attempt to found mission San Juan Capistrano on October 30 but have to abandon their efforts just eight days later when they hear that mission San Diego is under attack and that one of the fathers there has been killed. Before leaving for San Diego, they bury the mission bells to keep them safe. In addition, between 1786 and 1798 Lasuén founds nine more California Missions. Noted California historian Hubert H. Bancroft praises Lasuén as, “First among the California prelates…a friar who rose above his environment and lived many years in advance of his time.”

Between Serra’s first voyage in 1769 and the secularization of the missions in 1834, a total of 128 friars serve the Alta California missions. Twenty-nine of these are Basque: Marcos Amestoy, Gregorio Amurrio, Arreñaza, José Arroíta, Josef Barona, José Antonio Calazada, Domingo Carranza, Tomás Esténaga, Francisco González de Ibarra, Domingo de Iturrate, Martín de Landaeta, Fermín Francisco de Lasuén, Marcelino Marquinez, José Manuel de Martiarena, Pablo de Mugartegui, José
Antonio de Murguía, Matías Antonio de Noriega, Juan Prestamero, Andrés Quintana, Saizar de Vitoria, Juan Norberto de Santiago, Vincente Francisco de Sarria, Faustino Solá, Román Fernandez de Ulibarri, Francisco Xavier Uría, José Antonio de Uría, José Antonio de Urresti, Juan Vizcaino and José María de Zalvidea.

1775-1776- Governor Bucareli y Ursua requests that Anza and Juan José Echeveste mentioned earlier as part of the Basque network in Mexico City, give him an estimate regarding the cost of a colonization trip to California. Echeveste develops the entire list of needed supplies “from shoes to hair ribbons” and the total costs. Anza then asks Bucarelli y Ursua to appoint Basque Miguel Gregorio de Echarri, mentioned before as General Elizalde’s supply officer, as his supply officer. The first officer and field soldier chosen by Anza’s to accompany him on the expedition is José Joaquín Moraga. Moraga is Basque and Anza praises his “greater intelligence and his ability to write.” When chosen by Anza, Moraga is a Lieutenant at Fronteras and has served in the army for eighteen years. The Apache had killed his father—a frontier soldier, as they had Anza’s father.

With these details completed, Anza leads a much larger second expedition on a 6-month trek from October 1775 to March 1776 from Tubac, Sonora to Monterey, Alta California. It involves 300 men, women and children plus 1,000 animals. Because of births along the way, more people arrive in Monterey than left Tubac. During the trek he visits the sites of what will become the cities of Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, San Jose and San Francisco.

The livestock Anza brings to Alta California enable the missions to be self-supporting and initiates the large herds of the Rancho Era. At the request of missionaries he also brings the first domesticated cats to California (two each for San Diego and San Gabriel) for the control of mice. Historian Herbert E. Bolton says this of Anza: “His performance of the strenuous tasks to which he was assigned revealed him in his true proportions—a man of heroic qualities, tough as oak, and silent as the desert from which he sprang.” Historian Donald Garate states that Anza’s expedition was “…unparalleled in the history of North America.”

1776- On March 28, Anza, his lieutenant Moraga, his chaplain Pedro Font and 17 soldiers reach San Francisco Bay. They are the first Europeans to stand on the San Francisco side of what we now call the Golden Gate. Anza becomes the founder of San Francisco and Moraga helps build the presidio there and aids with the construction of the mission. Moraga is the first commandant of the San Francisco presidio. Present at the initial settlement of San Francisco are Basques: Moraga, Juan Bernal, Felipe de Ochoa, Salvador Carriaga and Alejandro Antonio Duarte.

1776- On August 18 the Spanish ship San Carlos is first to sail into San Francisco Bay and put to anchor. Its pilot is Juan Bautista Aguirre and the ship makes a reconnaissance of the harbor.
Thus, the three major settlement excursions from Mexico into what will become the US are Basque financed and/or led: Oñate into New Mexico, Azlor into Texas with Urdiñola family money and Anza into California.

1776- Father Juan Bautista Velderrain (today’s accepted spelling is Beldarrain) who had briefly served during this year at Mission Tumacácori begins the reconstruction of Mission San Xavier del Bac with 7,000 pesos (more than 20 years of a missionary’s salary) borrowed from a wealthy businessman. Beldarrain dies in 1790 with the church unfinished and undecorated. Father Juan Bautista Llorens oversees its completion by the year 1797. It is now one of the most famous and most photographed missions in the Southwest.

1776- José Antonio de Vildósola is made presidio volante of Sonora. He is furnished 476 soldiers and his force becomes a mobile trouble-shooting force.

1776- José Antonio de Vildósola is made presidio volante of Sonora. He is furnished 476 soldiers and his force becomes a mobile trouble-shooting force.

1777- In November, José Joaquín Moraga, Anza’s former lieutenant, is directed by governor Bucareli y Ursua to lead a group of settlers to the area of present day San José, California to settle what would become the first town in California. Known as El Pueblo de San José de Guadalupe its settlers are to supply food crops to the presidios of San Francisco and Monterey. (When Anza returned to Tubac in 1776, Moraga remained in California. Moraga died in San Francisco in 1785.)

1777- Commanding General Cavallero de Croix recommends either of two Basques to be governor of New Mexico: Jacobo de Ugarte y Loyola or Pedro de Garibay. However, the King of Spain had already appointed Juan Bautista de Anza II. In addition, Anza is made commander of all troops in Sonora. In this same year he leads an expedition into Moqui Country to try and save that people who are dying as a result of a long drought.

1777- Juan de Ugalde, mentioned before and now a Colonel, is sent back to the New World as governor of San Francisco de Coahuila in northern New Spain. His main focus is to protect Coahuila from Lipan and Mescalero Apaches.

1777- Jacobo de Ugarte y Loyola, mentioned previously, is made military governor of Sonora. He also serves briefly as the governor of Puebla de Los Angeles, Sonora, in the mid 1780’s. While in Sonora, Ugarte leaves the planning and campaigning against the Apache to Joseph Antonio de Vildósola.

1777- On November 24 Manuel Barragua and two other residents of Tubac write a letter to Captain Pedro de Allande y Saaverada protesting the loss of protection from the Apache because of the transfer of the Tubac presidio to Tucson.

1777- The general overseer of Peru is José Antonio de Arreche.

1777- Alta California mission Santa Clara found is founded by José Murguía.

1778- José Antonio de Arrieta is Lt. Governor of New Mexico.
1778- Charles-Michel d’Irumberry de Salaberry is born in Quebec. He is the son of previously mentioned Ignace. Charles wins distinction for repelling the Americans’ advance on Quebec during the War of 1812.

1778- Some frontier soldiers also raise livestock to supplement their income by feeding their outpost. An example is militiaman at Laredo, José María Elizondo, who lists two hundred cattle and over three thousand sheep, goats and other livestock in his possession.

1778-1792- Estanislao de Landazuri y Bolivar is judge superintendent of the Mint of Lima, Peru.

1778- Tedoro de Croix, commanding General of the Provincias Internas, holds his first Council of War at Monclova to realign and reinforce the frontier presidios. Of the twelve military experts in attendance, at least three are Basque: Jacobo Ugarte y Loyola, Juan de Ugalde and Diego de Borica.

1779- In Croix’s third Council of War, at least half the participants are Basques: Fermín de Mendinueta, Juan Bautista de Anza and Jacobo Ugarte y Loyola.

1779- José Antonio Vildósola returns to Terrenate as commander and Basque Pedro de Allande is placed in charge of the Tucson presidio. Allande builds most of the presidio at his own expense. He places the heads of several slain Apache on the battlements of one of the walls.

1779- Captains Ignacio de Arteaga and Juan Francisco la Bodega y Quadra and their pilot, Juan Bautista de Aguirre, sail from San Blas, Mexico to the Kenai Peninsula in Alaska and claim it for Spain. They are the first Europeans to see the mouth of the Columbia River.

1779- Anza II leads a successful expedition finding a route between Santa Fe, New Mexico, and Arizpe, Sonora, the capitol of the Priivincias Internas.

1779- In August and September, Anza II, at age 42, leads what has been called one of the finest military expeditions in North American history. He heads a party of 600 men and 1,500 horses across New Mexico and Colorado to engage Chief Cuerno Verde and his Comanche. Near present day Rye, Colorado, he corners the chief and kills him and several other leaders. He sends the chief’s unique headdress to the viceroy in Mexico City as proof of his accomplishment. The viceroy forwards it to the Vatican. This victory precipitates the Pecos Peace Treaty. Anza’s excursion into Colorado is the first extensive European entry into the area.

1780- Frigate Captain Juan Francisco la Bodega y Quadra, mentioned previously, leaves Mexico for Havana to fight the British in the Caribbean.

1780- Captain Don Joséph Antonio Vildósola is commandant and Indian fighter at Las Nutrias.
(Basque military leaders in the New World were numerous. All Basques had been granted nobility in the 1400’s and only men of noble birth could become Spanish military officers. Many of these same commanders grew up speaking only Basque. However, to be an officer one was required to speak and write Spanish. Therefore, many learned Spanish as their second language.)

1780- Padre Francisco Tomás Hermenegildo Garces, who had accompanied both of Anza’s expeditions into California, and Basque Padre Antonio Barreneche, are directed to build mission Purisima Concepcion at Fort Yuma. On July 19, 1781 after an Indian attack the previous day, the two friars seek shelter on the California side of the Colorado River. Yuma Indians find them and club them both to death. Father Garces and Father Barreneche become the second and third missionaries martyred in California.

1780- The mayor of Lima is Francisco de Ocharan y Mollinedo.

1780- Captain at the Altar presidio, Miguel Ignacio de Urrea is killed by the Apache. He is the son of Bernardo de Urrea, soldier and owner of the ariz ona ranch.

1780- The commissioner of Alamos, Pimería Alta is Juan Agustine de Iriarte and the commissioner of Sinaloa is Agustín Antonio de Norsagaray.

1780- Bernardo Gálvez, along with José de Ezpeleta, force the surrender of British troops at Fort Charolette at Mobile, now in Alabama. Ezpeleta remains to defend Mobile.

1780- Jacobo de Ugarte y Loyola establishes the presidio of Bavispe, Sonora.

1780- On September 10, after considerable study of reports of previous Spanish contacts with the Western tribes, Governor of New Mexico Juan Bautista de Anza leads a party of soldiers, Indians and several priests west from Santa Fe towards the Hopi pueblos of Zuni and Oraibi. His mission is different than previous Spanish contacts. Rather than using the “whip-and-gun” technique in dealing with the peoples of the pueblos, he goes with food and the assurances to the Indians of fair treatment by the government and the priests. Historian John M. Slater calls Anza, “…a man of remarkable qualities of leadership and of great integrity of character…”

1781- Friar José Murguía sets the cornerstone for mission Santa Clara in Alta California. It is the third attempt to build the mission and Murguía designs it. He works right alongside the Indians in all aspects of the construction. It is called “Father Murguía’s Church.” Sadly, he dies four days before Father Serra arrives from Carmel to consecrate the mission. It is said to be the most imposing structure in California at the time.

1781-1782- Governor Juan de Ugalde of Coahuila carries out extensive campaigns against the Apache in northern Coahuila and the lower Pecos region of Texas. The campaign is unsuccessful as in June of 1784 the Indians kill forty-six people and steal six hundred horses and mules. However, Ugalde is not finished fighting the Apache.

1782- Juan Pantoja y Arriaza, pilot of La Princesa, makes the first charts of San Diego Bay.

1782- Because of the war with England (1779-1785) only two supply ships per year make the voyage to California. In this year, the supply ships were the Princesa captained by Agustín de Echevarría and the Favorita, commanded by Juan Bautista de Aguirre.

1782- Manuel de Urquidi is given a five year contract to provision San Eleazario presidio and later, in 1783, Santa Fe as well.

1782-1790- Joaquín J. de Arrese y Lardizabal is general administrator of customs and tariffs for Peru.

1783- Of the six merchants listed by the Merchants Guild of Chihuahua to supply the military on the Sonoran frontier, five are Basque: Francisco Guizarnótegui, Joaquín de Amezqueta, Joseph Antonio de Yribarren, Manuel de Urquidi and Joaquín de Ugarte.

1783- Simón Bolivar, El Libertador, is born in Caracas, Venezuela, to a wealthy Basque family from Bizkaia. Bolivar becomes the father of Latin American independence as he frees from Spanish rule the area of Latin America that will become Colombia, Ecuador, Panama, Venezuela and part of Peru. The country of Bolivia is named for him. He is the subject of numerous books. (In 2004, Bolivar’s set of flintlock pistols sets an auction record for firearms when they are sold for over one million dollars.)

Basques immigrate to South America by the thousands. Their social, economic, religious and governmental contributions were and are monumental. The University of Nevada has published an extensive book by José Manuel Azcona Pastor dealing with this influx. It is titled “Possible Paradises--Basque Emigration to Latin America.”

1783-1799- Father Francisco Yturralde completes mission San Pedro y San Pablo de Tubutama in the northern Sonoran desert.

1784- Diego de Borica is Adjutant Inspector at Janos.

1784-1803- José de Gorbea y Vadillo is criminal district attorney for Peru.

1785- Manuel Xavier Rodríguez Erdoíza is born on February 27 in Chile. He becomes a Chilean lawyer and guerrilla leader considered to be one of the founders of independent Chile.
1785- Diego Gardoqui comes to the new country of the United States as the first Spanish ambassador to America. Born Diego María de Gardoqui y Arriquibar he is the head of the successful commercial house of Joseph Gardoqui and Sons in Bilbao with business connections to the American colonies. During the Revolutionary War with Great Britain he aids American privateers such as John Paul Jones as they cruise European waters capturing ships of various registry. In Spain, Gardoqui sells the cargo the Americans seize and helps refit the ships as warships for the Colonists. He obtains loans for the US and also sends needed war materials and supplies to the colonies. In addition, Gardoqui sends clothes and blankets to George Washington during his ordeal at Valley Forge. While he always works with the best interests of Spain in mind, he is a true ally to the Americans when they have few other friends in Europe. He and John Jay, the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, work out a treaty dealing with trade access along the Mississippi River. However, congress does not ratify the treaty.

Gardoqui also supplied his good friend George Washington with a prized royal Spanish stud work-donkey so Washington could breed his own mares and produce work mules. Washington named the donkey “Royal Gift.” This became the beginning of the U.S. mule industry. A statue honoring Gardoqui stands in Philadelphia and his portrait hangs in the Palace of Governors in Santa Fe, New Mexico.

1786- Fray Lausén founds Mission Santa Barbara in Alta California.

1786- Juan Bautista de Anza II orchestrates the Pecos Peace Treaty with the Comanche which is the longest lasting peace treaty ever signed by the Comanche and any government of Spain, Mexico or the U.S. An important element of the treaty was the promise of fair trade at Taos where New Mexican traders often cheated the Comanche. Anza went on to lay the foundation for an alliance with the Navajo. In the same year he also negotiates a peace, trade and alliance pact with several other bands of Navajo.

Historian Alfred Thomas says this regarding Anza’s handling of the Indian barricade in New Mexico: “The results were little short of remarkable. He reorganized towns and pueblos… and built up their defense. He opened a route between New Mexico and Sonora for trading and strategic purposes. He carried aid and the offer of protection of Spanish arms to the Moqui, and saved people from extermination by drought, disease, Utes and Navajos. Finally he campaigned with brilliant success against the enemies of the frontier. Far up in present Colorado in 1779 he hunted down and defeated the Comanches. Next with kindness and rare political sagacity he won their affection, reconciled them with their bitterest enemy, the Utes, and then bound both to Spanish power by a defensive and offensive alliance against the Apaches. More, with this combined force of Spaniard, Ute and Comanche, he threatened the Navajo, forced them into the compact, required them to dissolve their agreements with the Gila Apaches and to declare war upon these former friends and allies. [Anza was] among the leading governors and frontiersmen of provincial North America.” (Emphasis added.)

1786- Jacobo de Ugarte y Loyola is made commandant general of the Interior Provinces, which includes Sonora, Alta and Baja California, Nueva Vizcaya, New Mexico, Texas and Coahuila. He governs Sonora and the Californias in person but, because of the vast distances involved, he chooses three fellow Basques to govern the rest: Diego de Borica, Nueva Vizcaya; Juan Bautista de Anza, New Mexico; and Juan de Ugalde, Texas and Coahuila. Another Basque on his staff is surgeon Gregorio Arriola.

Ugarte insists the only acceptable remedy to problems posed by Lipan Apaches is to deport them to an overseas province. Later, having jurisdiction of the Interior Provinces he implements a policy consistent with his hatred of the Apaches. However, he favors a general peace with the Comanche and a treaty is negotiated, at the expense of the Lipan Apaches, by Governor Domingo Cabello y Robles in Texas. Ugarte dies August 19, 1798 in Guadalajara after completing 58 years in the service of Spain.

1786- Anza II asks to be released as governor of New Mexico.

1786- Faustino de Elhuyart is named director general of the Tribunal of Aztec Mining covering all of Mexico.

1786- Felipe Antonio de Goicoechea is named Comandante of the Royal Presidio of Santa Bárbara in Alta California. For two years he leads the construction of the entire presidio complex, some of which may still be visited just off State Street in downtown Santa Barbara today. He is the first of at least five Basque Comandantes of the Santa Bárbara presidio. The others are: José de la Guerra y Noriega (twice), Gabriel Moraga, José Joaquín Maitorena and Juan María Ibarra. Other initial Basques at Santa Bárbara are: José Carmen Arana, José Prudencia Arangure, Manuel Orchaga, Loreto Salazar and Manuel Duarte, who would later be killed by Indians.
1786- Indian fighter Juan de Ugalde, mentioned previously, is promoted to commander of arms of the Provincias Internas with authority over Coahuila, Nuevo León, Nuevo Santander and Texas.

1786- Juan Agustín Iriarte is commissioner of Alamos and Agustín Antonio de Norsagaray is commissioner of Villa Sinaloa.

1786- The first Uriburu's come to Argentina. The family becomes wealthy and powerful and a leading influence in the country. There is also a city in Argentina named Uriburu.

1787- Ugalde is made commanding general of the same area mentioned above.

1787- Fray Lasuén founds Mission La Purísima Concepción in Alta California and the first missionary is José Arroita.

1787- Anza II is made Commander of Buenaventura Presidio (formally Fronteras.) (Anza II is another of the frontier Basques who had a deep respect for the fighting ability of the Apache.)

1787- Anza II sends Don Manuel de Echeagaray, captain of the Presidio of Santa Cruz, New Mexico, into the Mogollón Mountains to engage the Apache. The campaign is extremely successful. In 1788 Jacobo de Ugarte y Loyola promotes Echeagaray to Lt. Colonel because of his successes.

1787- Fray Pedro de Arriquibar is the last Franciscan missionary at the original Tubac garrison.

1787- Francisco Guizarnótegui receives a five-year contract to be the sole supplier for all the military companies of Nueva Vizcaya and New Mexico.

1787- Juan Bautista Elguezábal is captain of San Carlos presidio.

1787- In March, eight bands of Mescalero Apache gather at El Norte presidio to accept a peace proposal. Afterwards, several bands move from the presidial reservation into an area of Coahuila patrolled by Colonel Juan de Ugalde and his troops. He is unaware of the truce and attacks one of the bands. Even after he learns of the pact, he attacks two additional bands. Ugalde refuses to observe the end of hostilities or to release those he takes prisoner.

1787- Spaniards are offered rewards for pairs of Apache ears. By the 1790’s it is common to ship Apache prisoners, even women and children, from New Spain to Havana. They are bound and imprisoned en route. Being exposed to new diseases, most die before they reach the island. Those who do survive usually spend the rest of their lives as slaves.
1787- The minister of the Indies is the experienced and able Jacobo de Ugarte y Loyola. Ugarte begins bringing peace and stability in the borderlands with the various Apache bands. It is the turning point in the Apache-Spanish relations.

1788- Don Marcial de Echeagaray leads an expedition to attempt to find a route through the Gila Mountains to Zuñi.

1788- Anza II is commander of the Tucson Presidio. On December 19, while visiting his home in Arizpe, he dies suddenly at the age of 52. He is buried in the side chapel of the cathedral of Nuestra Señora de Loreto at Arizpe, Sonora. Historian Ronald Kessler says this of Anza, “[When he died it] ended the most brilliant military career in all of the history of North America. This man’s life has affected millions of people. The peace he achieved between many nations is a grand example to be followed. [I] firmly believe that this man is the greatest American Hero that ever lived. If only the people of the North American continent could realize the enormous shadow that he has cast.” (Emphasis added.)

1789- The justice of the High Court of Caracas is José Bernardo de Asteguieta y Díaz de Sarralde.

1789- Francisco de Eliza is given command of an expedition to establish a permanent presidio in Nootka, Alaska for the defense of Spanish interests on the Pacific coast. He orders Juan Bautista de Matute and his ship, the Aránzazu to be the service between San Blas and Nootka. Eliza, commanding the Concepción, and Matute leave for Alaska in 1790 and establish a fortress there.

1789- Luis Gonzaga de Araba y Sáenz de Navarrete is named governor of Valparaiso, Chili.

1789- Juan de Ugalde launches a major campaign against the Apache in West Texas.

1790- Ugalde defeats a group of more than 300 Lipan and Mescalero Apache at Arroyo de la Soledad, the present day Sabinal River Canyon. This effectively breaks the back of Apache resistance in Texas. In commemoration of this victory the battlefield is named Cañon de Ugalde and the city and county of Uvalde, Texas take their names from commander Ugalde. In 1790 Ugalde is relieved of his command due to poor treatment of the Mescalero. He is ordered back to Spain where he is promoted to field marshal in 1797 and to lieutenant general in 1810 and awarded the Gran Cruz de San Hermenegildo in 1815. He dies in Cádiz in 1816 at the age of 87.
Don Miguel José de Azanza
1789-1790- Miguel José de Azanza, from Acoiz, Nafarroa, is Viceroy of New Spain.

1790- According to William A. Douglass, during this year in California history, Basques occupy many key posts in the Church and government. Pablo de Mugartegui is the director and chief of the California missions serving from Mexico City. Jacobo Ugarte y Loyola is commander of the Internal Provinces, which includes California. The lieutenant governor of both Californias is José Joaquín Arrillaga. The commander of the port city of San Blas, Mexico, through which California is supplied is Juan Francisco la Bodega y Quadra and the official of Tepic, who serves the Franciscans as the purchasing agent for the missions is Esteban Lazcano.

1791- José Ygnacio Moraga is commander of the Tucson Presidio. His younger brother, José Joaquín Moraga was Anza II’s lieutenant on the California expedition and was credited with founding San José.

1791- Juan de Pagazaurtundúa is a military engineer assigned to the Sonoran frontier.

1791- Juan Domingo de Ordozgoiti is general administrator of customs and tariffs for Peru.

1791- Fray Lasuén founds Missions Santa Cruz and Nuestra Señora de la Soledad in Alta California.

1791-1797- José I. de Lecuanda y Ezcarraga is accountant and administrator of customs in Peru.

1792- By this time, Basques have been in the New World for over three hundred years.

1792- The governor of California is José Joaquín de Arillaga.

1792- British negotiator George Vancouver and Spanish negotiator Juan Francisco de Bodega y Quadra begin discussions regarding the west coast of North America, its boundaries and accessibility by each country.

1793- Francisco José Urrutia is the governor-appointed mayor of Durango, Mexico.
1794- Among the Basques stationed at the Tucson Presidio are officers Mariano Urrea, Juan Felipe Beldarrain, José María Sosa, Francisco Usarraga and cadets José Romero de Urrea and Bernardo de Urrea.

1794-1800- The governor of California is Diego de Borica.

1795-1810- In Valladolid, Michoacán, led by Juan Basagoiti, there are over 200 Basques involved in government, commerce, ranching, mining and sugar production. In Morelos and Cuernavaca, Basques own all the sugar factories.

1795- Manuel de Echeagaray is promoted to military commandant of Sonora.

1795- José de Rezabal y Ugarte is named captain general of all of Chile.

1796- Lieutenant Mariano Urrea marries Gertrudis Elías González in Arizpe. Both are from pioneering Sonoran military families. In 1797, Basque padre Pedro Arriquibar baptizes their first son.

1796- The first governor of Tennessee, John Sevier, is Basque. Born in Rockingham County, Virginia, to a French Huguenot family who originally spelled their name “Xavier.”

1797- Juan Bautista Elguézabal is appointed interim governor of Texas. He is acting governor when Louisiana is sold to the United States and must handle hundreds of petitions of immigrants from Louisiana requesting to relocate in Texas. When José Irigoyen is appointed the next governor, Irigoyen never comes to Texas. Elguézabal then retains the office until he dies in 1805 in San Antonio.

1797- Fray Lasuén founds Missions San José, San Juan Bautista, San Miguel de Arcángel and San Fernando Rey de España in Alta California. José Martiarena is the first missionary at San Juan Bautista.

1797- José de Urrea is born at the presidio of Tucson. He is the great-grandson of Bernado de Urrea, who was a key figure in the naming of Arizona and Juan Bautista de Anza’s deputy justicia mayor. Urrea will become a leading general in Mexico.

1797-1800- Blás Ignacio de Tellería is Consul of Lima, Peru.

1798- Fray Lasuén founds Mission San Luis Rey de Francia in Alta California.
1800- Before the Louisiana Purchase, the last Spanish Governor of Louisiana is Juan Manuel de Salcedo, born in Bilbao, Bizkaia.

1800- José Retegui comes to Mexico to work in the Fresnillo silver mines. He becomes one of the wealthiest men in the region.

1803- Army surgeon Dr. Cristóbal María Larrañaga, assigned to Santa Fe and mentioned before, introduces smallpox vaccine to New Mexico as a part of the Spanish government’s Royal Expedition to take vaccinations to all the colonies.

1803- The last governor of Louisiana while under French rule is Pierre Clement, Baron de Laussat, born in Pau, Nafarroa. The first historian of Louisiana is Charles De Gayarre.

(According to Michel-Antoine Goitia-Nicolas of the Louisiana Basque Society and Cultural Organization, some of the successful Basque families in Louisiana in the 17th and 18th centuries were the Lasalle’s, Juchereau’s (Utxero), Lemoyne’s, Echenique’s, Etchepart’s and Irizarry’s.)

During the last 30 years of Spanish rule in Alta California (present day California) three of the governors are native Basques. They are José Joaquin de Arrillaga, Diego de Borica Retegui and Pablo Vincente de Sola.

José Joaquin de Arrillaga

José Arrillaga, a professional soldier from Aya, Gipuzkoa, is governor of both Baja and Alta California from 1792 to 1794 and from 1800 to 1804. He is governor of Alta California again from 1804 until 1814 when he dies at the mission of Soledad. He is called “Papa Arrillaga” because he is present at every baptism or wedding in California upper-class society.
Diego de Borica

Diego de Borica y Reteguí, from Vitoria, Alaba, is in charge of the Presidios of Chihuahua before becoming governor of Alta California from 1794-1799. Borica is also a soldier and had served as a Lieutenant Colonel under previously mentioned General Jacobo de Ugarte y Loyola, fighting Apache tribes along the northern Mexican frontier in 1787. Borica is a wealthy man and is married to Basque, Maria Magdalena de Urquidi, who is a direct descendent of one of the founders of Durango, Mexico. Borica’s health forces him to retire in 1799. He dies in Durango in 1800.

Father Fermín Francisco de Lasuén

During the time Arrillaga and Borica are the Governors of Alta California, their close friend, Fermín Francisco de Lasuén, also from Vitoria, is President of the Alta California missions from 1785 to 1803. According to William A. Douglas, “Lasuén manifested a clear preference to work with fellow Basque friars.”
1803- Iturrigaray y Aróstegui is made Viceroy of New Spain. He is married to María Inés de Jáuregui y Arístegui and rules until 1808 when he is deposed by political activists and returned to Spain.

1804- Juan Alejo de Arizmendi is appointed first Bishop of Puerto Rico. Arizmendi is born in Puerto Rico in 1760 and dies there in 1814. He is a liberal patriot and becomes a national symbol of Puerto Rico.

1804- Under the directions of governor José Arrillaga, Gabriel Moraga, son of José Joaquín Moraga the founder of San José, becomes the first European to explore the central valley of California. He is among the best traveled and most geographically knowledgeable of all the early Californios. He leads more than forty expeditions into the central valley from 1804 to 1817. He discovers and names most of the rivers and landmarks in the valley including the valley itself, Pacheco Pass, the Merced, San Joaquin, Tuolumne, Stanislaus, Calaveras, Kings and Mokelumne Rivers. He also names the areas later to become Sacramento and Modesto. According to some historians, he names the San Joaquin River and the San Joaquin Valley after his father. During these explorations, historian Charles Edward Chapman suggests Moraga may have also been the discoverer of Nevada.

1804- José Antonio Calzada is the first missionary at Alta California mission Santa Inés.

1804- The governor of Baja California is Felipe de Goycochea.

1805- Mariano Urrea, grandson of Bernardo Urrea, is commander of Altar presidio. He holds the position until 1811. Mariano is the father of José Urrea who will become an important part of Mexico’s history beginning in the 1830’s.

1806- California governor Arillaga also orders José Joaquín Maitorena to explore the interior of California. None of Maitorena’s efforts result in attempts at colonization.

Jesuit Order founders St. Ignatius from Loyola, Gipuzkoa, and St. Francis from Javier, Nafarroa, are both Basques.

1806-The governor of Baja California is Felipe Antonio de Goycochea, former Comandante of Santa Bárbara.

1808- Pedro de Garibay replaces José Joaquín Vincente de Iturrigaray y Aróstegui as Viceroy of Mexico. He is a handpicked puppet of the political activists who have taken over the government and is a senile octogenarian and an ineffective leader.

1809- Fathers Santiago Usuastegui and Saturnino Arizeta complete mission La Purísma Concepción de Caborca in the northern Sonoran Desert.
1809- Friar Miguel Zugastegui, who is part of the Independence movement in Mexico, dies in prison after his capture by the Spanish. He is considered a Martyr of Mexican Independence.

1810- Miguel Ramos Arizpe is a respected leader in Coahuila and thier delegate to the audiencia of Guadalajara.

1811- Rancher and retired Lieutenant Colonel Ignacio Elizondo helps quell an early attempt to overthrow Spanish control of Texas called the Hidalgo Revolt.

1811- Don José Agustíne Yndajauregui is the teacher at Parral.

1813- On August 18, near the Medina River in Texas, a military action involving two Spanish armies numbering 1,600 troops is led by Joaquín Arredondo and Ignacio Elizondo against an army of 3,200 men, mostly Americans, rebelling against Spain. This rebel army is known as the Republican Army of the North. The Spanish armies crush the rebels in four hours killing 1,300 men, including the execution of the wounded prisoners. Among the other Basque officers in the two Spanish armies are: Commander of the infantry, Antonio Elosua; captain Vincente Arreola, Captain Antonio Zárate, second lieutenant José Ybarra, commander Francisco Arizmendi; and cavalry officers Manuel Zozaya, Miguel Serrano, Domingo Ugartechea and future interim governor of Texas, Juan José Elguezabal. The 1,300 rebels killed are much more than the total number of Texans that will be killed in the entire Texas Revolution, twenty-three years later in 1836.

1813- Don Bernardo Abeyta, a wealthy and influential New Mexican landowner and trader builds the chapel of El Santuario de las Esquipulas in Chimayo, New Mexico. It is one of the most sacred pilgrimage sites in the North American Southwest and is still known locally as the “Lourdes of America.”

1813- Francisco Iturralde is the Superior of the Franciscan College of the Holy Cross at Queretaro, Mexico.

1816- Juan José Ruiz de Apodaca y Eliza, from Araba, is Viceroy of Mexico.

1817- Gregorio Egurola is recognized for his lengthy military service at the Royal Presidio of San Agustín del Tucson in what is now Arizona.
Pablo Vincente de Solá

1815 to 1822- Pablo Vincente de Solá, born in Mondragon, Gipuzkoa, is the last Spanish governor of Alta California. He, like governor Borica, is also a Lieutenant Colonel and is appointed governor after José Arrillaga dies. Solá founds the first primary schools in California. He has a brother, Faustino, who serves as a Franciscan missionary in Alta California from 1786 to 1790.

Vincente Francisco de Sarria

During Solá’s term, the President of the missions in Alta California is fellow Basque Vincente Sarria.

1817- Sarria founds mission San Rafael Arcángel 20 miles north of San Francisco. He is also credited with the “first original contribution ever offered by a resident of California in the field of medicine,” an 1830 paper on caesarean section.

1818- Basques in the service of Spain at the Tucson presidio include: Frey Pedro Arriquibar, chaplain, and soldiers Francisco Usárraga, Francisco Amaya, Francisco Villaescusa, Ignacio Urias, Vincente Sosa, José Carrisosa, Nepomuceno Duarte, Valentine Usárraga, Ignacio Moraga and Juan Noriega. This accounted for ten percent of the posted personnel.

1818- Ignacio de Arancibia y Hormaegui is bishop of Monterrey.

1820-1840- During the 1820’s and 1830’s, great fortunes were made by Basque merchants controlling the production of Cuban sugar. These merchants were slave traders as well. Among these Cuban traffickers in black slaves were: Julián de Zulueta y Amondo, Domingo Aldama, Joaquín Pérez de Urria, Salvador Martiartu, Francisco de Bengoechea, Martí de Zavala, José de Zangroniz and his son Juan Bautista de Zangroniz and Benifacio González Larrinaga and his son Jacinto Larrinaga.
1821- Agustín de Itúrbide proclaims Mexico independent from Spain and names himself as Emperor of Mexico. He is born Agustín Cosme Damian de Itúrbide y Aramburu of Basque parents in Valladolid, (now Morelia, Michoacán) Mexico, in 1783. (His wife is Doña Maria Josepha de Arregui y de Gastelu.) Upon becoming “Emperor” he draws up a constitution known as the Plan de Iguala and enters Mexico City in September of 1821. He assumes the title of Agustin I on May 19, 1822.

1821- Nicaragua and four other Central American countries receive their independence from Spain due mainly to the efforts of Miguel Jerónimo Larreynaga. Larreynaga is born in Leon, Nicaragua on September 29, 1772 and is a statesman, philosopher, humanist, lawyer and poet. Larreynaga dies on April 28, 1847. His likeness is pictured on the $10 Corona in Nicaragua.

1822- In October, Itúrbide names Antonio López de Santa Anna as brigadier general and Commander of the Province of Veracruz. In November, Itúrbide becomes suspicious of Santa Anna and removes him from command. In December, Santa Anna proclaims “la Republica” and declares Itúrbide’s reign invalid.

1823- On January 4, 1823 Itúrbide signs the first permit for the settlement of Anglo-Americans in Texas for Stephen F. Austin’s colony. In March Itúrbide abdicates and leaves Mexico and goes to Europe. Not knowing there is a death warrant facing him if he returns to Mexico, in a vain attempt to regain his throne, he lands at Sota la Marina on July 15, 1824. He is recognized, captured and executed at Padilla, Tamaulipas, on July 19. In 1838 his remains are moved to Mexico City and enshrined in the National Cathedral.

1823- Luis de Uturribarría is chief political and military officer of Nueva Viscaya.

1824- Juan Martín de Veramendi is the first alcalde of Béxar (San Antonio, Texas.) Born in Béxar on December 17, 1778 he becomes vice-governor of Coahuila and Texas in 1830 and governor in 1832. His administration is favorable to the Anglo-American colonists and, therefore, unpopular with many of the Mexican groups.

1824- California rancher Antonio Jauregui is taking a load of pumpkins from his ranch in Oxnard to the pueblo of Los Angeles to sell. At an area that is now the city of Calabasas, a rattlesnake suddenly spooks his horse. The load is spilled and the pumpkins are smashed. The next spring, the seeds take root and pumpkins are plentiful. The spot becomes know as Las Calabazas and then the city of Calabasas. Jauregui, according to his granddaughter Anna Yrigoyen, walked across the US and to reach California in the early 1820’s.

1824- Agustín Jerónimo de Iturbide y Huarte fights alongside of Simón Bolívar during the Columbian war of independence at the Battle of Ayacucho. This battle secured the independence of Peru from Spain. Iturbide y Huarte is the son of Agustín de Iturbide (mentioned previously) and Ana María Josefa Ramona de Huarte y Muñiz. Iturbide y Huarte was Prince Imperial of Mexico while his father was the short-lived Emperor of Mexico. During the Mexican-American War Iturbide y Huarte leads the Celaya Battalion during the Battle of Padierna on August 19 and 20 of 1847. He later is an attaché at the Mexican Legation in London. He dies, unmarried in New York City on November 11, 1866. He is buried in Philadelphia.

José María de Echeandía
1825 to 1833- Mexican-born Basque, José María de Echeandía is governor of Alta California. The capital of Alta California is moved to San Diego because of his preferences.

1826- American trapper Jedediah Strong Smith enters California through the Mojave Desert. José Echeandía, governor of Alta California, is fearful that Smith’s reports will open the area to the hated Americans. Echeandía orders Smith out of California via the same route through the desert. Smith defies Echeandía and, instead, turns north and enters the San Joaquin Valley, probably through Walker Pass. On February 5, 1827, Smith becomes the first American to visit the future site of Bakersfield, thanks in part to disobeying Echeandía’s orders. (Ironically, according to biographer Maurice Sullivan, Smith is of Scottish, English and French-Basque ancestry. Smith’s exploits are the subjects of numerous books.)

1828- Rebellious Benito Bengochea is expelled from New Mexico and ordered to leave via Durango, Mexico City and Veracruz. However, he flees to Sonora where he receives shipments of arms at Guaymas, probably in anticipation of a Spanish invasion of Mexico.

1829- Santiago Ulibarrí, a direct descendent of Juan, is Alcalde of the Spanish villages of Pecos and El Vado, New Mexico. More than 100 years before Santiago, Juan de Ulibarrí had been well accepted and respected by the Indians of the Pecos pueblo. As mentioned previously, Juan had also been Alcalde of the village of Pecos.

1829- Lorenzo de Zavala is granted a contract to colonize Texas.
1829- Colonel José Antonio Viscarra is inspector-general of the Mexican troops at Santa Fe.

1830- A “Board for the Development of the Californias” is formed. Of its twenty members, eight are Basque: Pablo Vincente de Solá, José Ignacio Ormaechea, Manuel Ibarra, Francisco Cortina, Francisco Fagoaga, Isidro Icaza, Juan Francisco Azcarate and Tomás Zuria.

1831- In San Antonio, Jim Bowie, legendary American frontiersman, marries nineteen-year-old Ursula María de Veramendi, daughter of the provincial vice-governor of Texas, Don Juan Martín de Veramendi. Bowie and his father-in-law go into partnership establishing cotton gins in Saltillo, Coahuila. In September of 1833, while Bowie is away on a business trip, a cholera epidemic kills Ursula, her two children, her father and the rest of the Veramendi family. Bowie dies at the Alamo on March 6, 1836.

1832-1833 Juan Martín de Veramendi is governor of Texas.

1833- José Antonio Laureano de Zubiría y Escalante is Bishop of Durango.

1833- José Antonio Aguirre establishes a shipping company for the California-Mexico trade. He then establishes trade with the Orient on the Manía-Canton-Mexico run. In 1838 he settles permanently in Santa Barbara and becomes one of the most prominent citizens in California. He is considered the wealthiest merchant of the California coast and marries into one of the most prominent Old California families, the Estudillos.

1834- The Alta California Ranchos’ tallow and hide business depends on a shipping route between California and Callao, Peru. Of the twelve major shipping companies, four are Basque owned. They are: The Juan Francisco Izcue Company, the Aramburu Brothers, Urien and Company and Dalidou Larrabure and Company.

1834- Premier Cuban cigar brand “Por Larreñaga” is introduced by Ignacio Larreñaga making it the oldest continuously produced Havana brand still in existence.

1834- José de Urrea is made colonel in the Mexican army by Francisco Ellorriaga.

1834- Captain Juan José Elguézabal, veteran of the Medina River battle, is commandant of the Presidio del Río Grande in Coahuila and, like his father Juan Bautista Elguézabal mentioned earlier, is also adjutant inspector of the presidios of Coahuila and Texas. On August 30 he is made interim governor of Texas.

1835-1838- Manuel Uribe is president of Uruguay, South America.
Basques Involved at The Alamo and the Massacre at Goliad, Texas

1835- Colonists in Texas break away from Mexican rule and seize several towns and forts including the Alamo and the town of Goliad. In August, General Antonio López de Santa Anna orders José Domingo de Ugartechea, based at San Antonio, to try and keep the rebellion in check. Ugartechea is Principal Military Commandant of Coahuila and Texas. He considers the Texans to be disrespectful towards his government and its leaders. He writes in one letter, “Nothing is heard but God damn Santa Ana. God damn Urgartechea.”

In September he orders Lt. Francisco de Castañeda to secure a cannon from the Texans in the town of Gonzales. This leads to the battle on October 2 that initiates hostilities in the Texas Revolution. He continues to be involved in military actions through the end of the year. José María Torner y Mendivil is Mexican Secretary of War at the time.

1836- Ugartechea accepts command of inexperienced troops at Copano, Victoria and Goliad.

1836- Felíx María Zuloaga is a Mexican officer and fights against the Texas rebels.

1836- Pedro de Ampudia is a general in Santa Anna’s army. In February, because of increasing hostilities, Santa Anna heads for the Alamo and, the commander of the left wing of his army, General José de Urrea, heads to Goliad for the purpose of defeating the Texas rebels.

1836- Ygnacio de Labastida is the chief engineer of Santa Ana’s army and draws a topographic map of San Antonio and its surroundings, including the Alamo, prior to the battle. The map has survived and is at the University of Texas. It’s called “Labastida’s Plat.”

The battle for the Alamo begins on February 23, 1836. On February 29, during the siege but before fall of the Alamo, Antonio Cruz Arocha and Juan Seguin are able to escape through the Mexican lines surrounding the mission to go for reinforcements. It is too late. The Alamo falls six days later. By eight o’clock on March 6 the battle is over. All of the defenders are killed. Ongoing research indicates the number slain to be between 189 and 257. After the battle, while looking at the battle site, Mexican army Captain Fernando Urizza states to Santa Anna that he is amazed at the General’s insensibility to the death around him. Santa Anna, pointing to the charred corpses casually remarks, “These are the chickens. Much blood has been shed; but the battle is over. It was but a small affair.”

On March 11, two residents of San Antonio are the first to get word of the massacre out to the rest of Texas. They are Andres Barsena and Anselmo Begara (or Bogara).

1836- In February and March, José de Urrea leads his troops to several victories on his way to Goliad. (According to historian William R. Bradle, Urrea is Santa Anna’s most capable and trusted general.) Santa Anna has issued a decree that all prisoners must be executed because he considers them traitors. On February 27 Urrea captures a group of Texas rebels near San Patricio. A contemporary, Ruben M. Potter, reports that Urrea “…was not blood thirsty and when not overruled by orders of a superior, or stirred by irritation, was disposed to treat prisoners with lenity.” Santa Anna demands Urrea comply with his order. However, Urrea has no stomach for cold-blooded killing but he issues the order to shoot the prisoners. In actuality, he remits them to the village of Matamoros and asks Santa Anna’s pardon for doing so.

On March 15, Urrea captures thirty-three of Amon B. King’s company of Texans at the battle at Mission Nuestra Señora del Refugio. King had infuriated the Mexicans by burning local ranchos and shooting eight Mexicans seated around a campfire. His enemies are demanding vengeance. Urrea deals with the issue by having King and fourteen of his men shot while he releases all the others who were colonists or Mexicans. On March 20, however, things turn more serious as Urrea and his army captures approximately 240 Texans near Goliad. In addition, there are another 200 or so prisoners added to the group. He sends Santa Anna a letter asking for clemency for them. Santa Anna’s reply is a repeat of his order for execution. Santa Anna doubts Urrea’s willingness to execute the men and sends an order for Colonel José Nicolás de la Portilla to carry out his order. With the aid of his adjutant, Augustine Alcerrica, Portilla follows Santa Anna’s on March 27, 1836. Just fewer than 400 Texans are executed in a slaughter much greater and crueler than the one at the Alamo.

Colonel Francisco Garay, one of Portillo’s officers, shows mercy on several of the wounded Texans he had befriended and saves their lives. Goliad and the fall of the Alamo brand both Santa Anna and the Mexican people with a reputation for cruelty that inflames the population of Texas and the US, as well as Great Britain and France. Santa Anna’s brutality and the slaughters at the Alamo and Goliad considerably promote the success of the Texas Revolution.

Using the battle cries, “Remember the Alamo” and “Remember Goliad,” Sam Houston and his men catch up with Santa Anna and his army at San Jacinto less than five weeks after Goliad. Revenge is both swift and complete. Houston defeats Santa Anna and his army in just eighteen minutes, killing between six and seven hundred soldiers and capturing another seven hundred. Houston loses two men. Santa Anna is captured the next day and the war is over. Texas has gained its independence.

After the Mexican retreat from the battle of San Jacinto, Ugartechea goes to Matamoros where he reportedly helps formulate the policy of persuading Indians to go to war against the people of Texas.

1882- Apolinario Saldigua writes an account of how, when he was 16 and a fifer in the army, Santa Anna had shown him the burned bodies of William Travis and James Bowie.

1837- José María Tornel y Mendivil writes about the Texas war from the Mexican government’s and Santa Anna’s viewpoints. The Alamo remains the major historic shrine in Texas.

1837- In Louisiana, Basque inventor Louis Jacques Mendé Daguerre introduces his invention of the Daguerre-type camera to America. It is the first practical process of photography.
1838- Fernando Urizza, now a Colonel, publishes a diary of military operations in Texas and gives his version of the execution at Goliad.

1838- Félix María Zuloaga, a military man and politician who fought against the Texans, fights the Apache and Comanche in Sonora. He also fights during the war with the U.S. Later he is mayor of Chihuahua. He then becomes president of Mexico three times but is exiled to Cuba in 1865. Several years later he returns to Mexico as a successful tobacco merchant. Zuloaga dies in 1898 in Mexico City.

1839- In February, previously mentioned José Domingo de Ugartechea goes to Saltillo from his post in Monterrey to help defeat a federalist uprising. He is killed in the defense of the city on May 24, 1839.

1839- In Argentina, Esteban Echeverría writes El matadero (The Slaughterhouse) that is a landmark in the history of Latin American history. Echeverría is a political activist and also plays a significant role in the development of Argentine literature. A district in Buenos Aires, called Esteban Echeverría Partido is named for him.

1840- Joaquín de Iturbide is Minister of Justice in Mexico.

1841- Cesareo Lataillade, born in St.-Jean-de-Luz, makes his first voyage to California. He settles in Santa Barbara and in 1845 marries María Antonia de la Guerra y Noriega, a daughter from one of California’s most prominent families. In 1846 he is named vice-consul of Spain in Monterey and becomes French consul in 1849. In 1848, when gold is first discovered, he forms a supply company to the miners of Placer County and becomes one of California’s wealthiest businessmen. Unfortunately, he dies accidentally shortly before 1850.

1842-1844 José de Urrea assumes executive power of Sonora.

1842- In December, the first two presidents general of Uruguay, José Fructuoso Rivera and Manuel Oribe, faced each other in the Battle of Arroyo Grande. The defeated Rivera barricades himself in Montevideo. Oribe lays siege to the city for almost nine years, from February 1843 to October 1851.

1846- Urrea fights against the United States in the Mexican War.

Manuel Micheltorena

1842 to 1845- Manuel Micheltorena, a Mexican-born Basque, is Governor of Alta California.

1842- By this time, Basques have been in the Americas for over three hundred and fifty years.

1843- José Antonio Aguirre, from San Sebastian, and Ygnacio del Valle were awarded a Mexican land grant of over 97,000 acres in what is present day Kern County, California by Governor Manuel Micheltorena. This grant was named Rancho El Tejon and it remains the largest contiguous ranch in California. Neither Aguirre nor del Valle ever lived on the ranch. At one time, Aguirre owned over 200,000 acres in Southern California.

1844- Julian Ursua opens the Plaza Hotel in San Juan Bautista, Alta California. It is probably the earliest Basque hotel in North America.

1847- Miguel María de Echegaray, General in the Mexican army, battles the invading Americans. He also fights against the French until 1865. He is one of the coup leaders who help depose president Zuloaga, mentioned previously, from his office.

1849- General José de Urrea dies. He was never defeated in battle.

1849- The basic mining technology used in the California gold rush and the Comstock Lode in Nevada is imported from Mexico. Included in this technology is the arrastre. This is a device where a mule or burro pulls a heavy block of granite around and around in a circular trough, also made of granite blocks. Ore is placed in the trough and the stone block being dragged around a center post grinds the ore into finer pieces so the gold can be retrieved and processed. Basque historians Donald Garate and Joxe Mallea-Olaetxe both believe that the term arrastre is derived from the Basque words arri, meaning “stone,” and auste, meaning “breaking or grinding action.” Arrastres may still be found in remote, abandoned mining areas throughout the west.
1849- Rancho Los Encinos is purchased by Vincente de La Ossa. He establishes a vineyard, and raises cattle and sheep. In 1868 the 4,460-acre ranch is sold to Basques Eugene and Phillippe Garnier. The brothers are sheepmen but also build a roadhouse across the road from their home (now Ventura Boulevard) that becomes the focal point of the local Basque community. In 1878, after a nation-wide depression ruins the Garniers, their primary creditor, Gaston Oxarart, purchases the ranch. He continues in the sheep and agriculture business and dies in 1886. The ranch is willed to Gaston’s nephew, Simon Gless and in 1889 Gless sells the ranch to his father-in-law, Domingo Amestoy. Amestoy is one of the original stockholders of the Farmers and Merchants Bank and a charter member of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. (Oxarart, Gless and Amestoy initially travel from the Basque Country to Argentina. They then sail to California on the same ship.)

The rancho is eventually sold a piece at a time and in 1916 the final 1,170 acres are sold from the ranch. This last parcel becomes the city of Encino, in Southern California.

1849- Pedro Zabala, from Bilbao, arrives in San Francisco via Chile. He tries mining with limited success and heads to Monterey and establishes a prosperous mercantile business. He then begins acquiring large tracts of land and begins farming. He settles in Salinas to be closer to his larger farms.

1850- Pedro Altube comes to California seeking gold. He raises cattle and sheep instead. (He is 6’8” tall and is called “Palo Alto” --tall pine-- by his vaqueros. It is said Palo Alto, California, where he had a ranch, is named for him.) He makes enough money to buy a herd of cattle and trails them to Nevada. In 1873 he founds the huge Spanish Ranch with his brother Bernardo and starts bringing Basque friends and relatives to the U.S. to help with his growing enterprises. These people then spread to every western state. Altube is known as the “Father of Basques in the West.”

Other important early Basque ranchers in California and Nevada are Jean Baptiste Garat, Etienne Garat, Jean Pierre Indart (Yndart,), Juan “Chico” Indart, Juan “Grande” Etcheverry, Joaquín Bolado, Salvadore Itsague, Bernardo Ohaco, Antonio Harispuru, and John Arrambide. The YP brand (for Pete Yndart) is believed to be the third oldest brand in the U.S. It is the only brand registered in the U.S. Patent Office and has been in use since 1852.

Other Basques operating extensively in the Gold Country of California include the Abadie brothers, Juan Miguel Aguirre, Miguel Goldarecena, Salvadore Ihitzague, Juan Iribarre, Thomas Ithuralde, Jean Ochoa and Juan Oxaby.

1851- Queen Isabel II appoints Joaquín Marcos Satrustegui Bris Consul of Spain for San Francisco.

1851- Basques ranching in the Sentinella (Santa Nella) area of central California in the 1850’s include previously mentioned Pedro and Bernardo Altube, John Etcheverry, John Indart, and Joaquin Bolado.
1854-1860- Justo José de Urquiza is president of Argentina. He heads many improvements in the country but is assassinated in 1870; along with his sons Justo and Waldino, by followers of dissident and political rival Ricardo López Jordán. Urquiza is the son of Juan Bautista Alberdi and Josefa Aráoz y Balderrama.

1855- Jean-Baptiste Batz, Jean Etchemendy and Pierre Larronde are early sheepmen in Southern California.

1855- Michel “Miguel” Leonis arrives in Los Angeles from his home city of Cambo-les Baines. Leonis had been a smuggler in the Basque Country and is sent to America by his father to save the family’s name. With some questionable dealings he acquires Rancho El Escorpcion near the present day city of Chatsworth. Leonis is a big man and is known as “El Basquo Grande.” He is constantly involved in legal battles and has an armed band of enforcers who intimidate and discourage anyone who attempts to settle on his land. He continues to build his empire and, after the death of his wife, he has no direct heirs to his fortune. In 1886 he sends for his nephew, J. B. Leonis, to train him for to take over his business operation. J.B. becomes his accountant but has no interest in running his uncle’s ranches. (J.B. leaves to establish his own fortune and in 1905 he and a group of hog farmers found the City of Vernon, California, which becomes one of the richest industrial cities in America.)

On September 20, 1889 after having just won another lawsuit, Leonis celebrates with several rounds of brandy. That evening, heading home and driving his wagon trough Cahuenga Pass, the intoxicated Leonis falls from his wagon and is run over. He is sixty-five years old at the time.

1858- Domingo Bastanchury and José Sansiñena are early sheepman in the Orange County area.

1860- Pedro Albaitero, from Almandoz, is a major bakery owner in Mexico City. In the mid-eighteenth to the mid-twentieth centuries, bakeries in Mexico City are dominated by Nafarroan Basques, mostly from the Baztán Valley. By 1900 Albaitero develops the foundation for the modern bread industry in Mexico and the center for Basque immigrants into the community.

1860- Basque ranchers and butcher shop owners working in the gold rush area of California during the 1860’s include the Altube brothers, Juan Baptiste Arrambide, Bernardo Ohaco, John Indart, John Etcheverry, the Abadie brothers, Juan Miguel Aguirre, Miguel Goldarecena, Salvador Ihitzague, Juan Iribarre, Thomas Ithuralde, Jean Ochoa and Juan Oxaby.

1860- From the 1860’s to the 1890’s, besides the Basques previously named or to be named herein, the following are prominent in the Orange County area of Southern California: Bautista Duhart, Jean Pierre Daguerre, John Erramuspe, Miguel Erreca, Francisco Errocarte, Juan and Antonia Ordoquh, Ysidoro Eseverri, Martín Labat, Domingo Oyharzabal, Esteban “Steve” Oyharzabal, Felix Yriarte, Martín and Joseph Etchandy and Bernard Arroues.
1863- John Indart and Mary Erreca Indart open what may be the first Basque boardinghouse in the U.S. at Sentinella Ranch (Santa Enella) between Fresno and Stockton.

1865- In Nevada’s Humboldt County, a mining exploration firm named Zavala Mining Company deeds some promising land. Pablo Zavala heads the company.

1866- Juan Miguel and Martina Aguirre open what is probably the first actual ostitu (an ostitu is a Basque hotel, boardinghouse, restaurant, meeting place, etc.) in the US on Powell Street in San Francisco. The name of the hotel is not documented and is simply called “Aguirre’s.”

1868- Financier Able Stearns leases Southern California range in the Cajón de Santa Ana, Las Bolsas and the Paredes to seventeen sheepmen, eight of whom are Basque. They are, in Stearns’ spelling, Pedro Etchevery, Miguel Ydegollen, Pedro Archimo, Martín Etchepare, Juan Uristey, Domingo Bastanchury, Jean Larre and Bautista Yndart.

1870- José Ugarriza, Mateo Badiola, José Erquiaga and Juan Aldamiz are pioneer sheepmen in the Winnemucca, Nevada area.

1871- Dominique Amestoy founds Farmers & Merchants Bank in downtown Los Angeles.

1872- The last of the Basque names is added to the El Morro cliff inscriptions in New Mexico. It is written in English and reads:

    SIMON HILGER
    ANTONIO ABETYIA
    FREIGHTERS SANTA FE JULY 3 1872

1873- Patriarch of an early San Joaquin Valley family, Jean Burubeltz comes to Bakersfield. He marries Jeanne Erreca in 1890 and the family operates several of the pioneering Basque hotels in the area.

1875- Also in Nevada’s Humboldt County, the Viscaino Ledge Spanish Company is exploring for precious metals. Three Basque partners own the company: Florencio Crespo, José Manuel Apariz and José Antonio Erquiaga.

1875- Three of the earliest sheepmen in Kern County, California are brothers Domingo, Guillermo and Esteban Oyharzabal.

1877- Braulio Iriarte Goyeneche from Elizondo arrives in Mexico City. By 1890 he owns some of the city’s major bakeries and, along with other investments, these make him one of Mexico’s most important industrialists.
1877- Juan Iriarte Ansaño reaches Argentina and is the founder of the first dairy in the province of Buenos Aires. He marries María Larralda and they develop a large ranch devoted to the breeding, development and exploitation of sheep and cattle.

1878- José Doroteo Arango Arámbula is born near San Juan del Río, Durango on June 5. He is the son of Agustín Arango and María Micaela Arámbula. He becomes a bandit, a leading general in the Mexican Revolution and a provisional governor of the state of Chihuahua before he is assassinated in 1923. He is better known as Francisco “Pancho” Villa.

1880- Félix Berenguer de Marquina is Viceroy of Mexico.

1880- Ricardo Galbis is the governor of the Bank of Spain on the island of Cuba. He builds the first handball court on the island.

1880’s- The southern San Joaquin Valley is chosen by several Basque settlers as their new home. Among these are Patin (Pete) Etcheverry, Jean Ansolabehere, and Marie and Louise Inda. They become the forerunners of the several thousand Basques in the Bakersfield area today.

1882- Alfonso Erburu arrives in the US and later settles in the Ventura, California area where he becomes a leading sheepman and progressive farmer.

1883- In July, commandant of the Chilean army, Alejandro Gorostiaga Orrego, defeats Peru in the War of the Pacific.

1885- Escualdun Gazeta, a Basque weekly started by José Goytino, begins publication in Los Angeles.

1887- Pedro Albaítero, mentioned earlier, and José Arrache construct La Florida, a steam powered flourmill, which is the first flourmill in Mexico City. Before this time the mills were on the outskirts of the city to utilize waterpower from streams. By 1896 the two partners own at least eleven major bakeries in the city.

1889- José Navarro and Antonio Azcuenaga, both from Bizkaia, reach the Jordan Valley of southeastern Oregon. They are among the first Basques to settle in that state.

1889- José Sansiñena acquires a 5,000-acre sheep ranch that now includes most of the city of La Habra, in southern California. He has as many as 15,000 sheep and several hundred cattle. He dies in 1896 and his widow marries Ysidora Eseverri. Later heirs to the property sell the ranch in sections for development.

1890- Fernando Etcheverry establishes his sheep business in the Bakersfield area.
1890’s- Basques become numerous enough in Kern County and Bakersfield that the local newspaper, The Bakersfield Daily Californian, begins publishing occasional articles written in Euskara, the Basque language.

1892- By this time, Basques have been in the New World for over four hundred years.

1893- The first edition of the weekly California’ko Eskual Herria is published in Los Angeles by Martín Biscailuz.

1893- Faustino Mier Noriega and Fernando Etcheverry open the Iberia Hotel in Kern, now Bakersfield, California. (Faustino Mier is from Santander, Spain and comes to the U.S. to work for his uncle Vincente Noriega in Tulare, California and adopts his uncle’s surname as his own.) In 1906 Faustino changes the name of the Iberia to the Noriega Hotel. Today, according to Jeronima Echeverría, the Noriega Hotel is not only the oldest ostatu in the US; it is also the oldest in the world. It is the only establishment that still takes in Basque boarders and serves family-style meals at one seating.

1911- An interesting note related to Basque exploration. Hiram Bingham, a historian and assistant professor of Latin American History at Yale University, is credited with “discovering” the lost Inca city of Machu Picchu in South America on his 1911 Peruvian expedition. However, Melchor Arteaga, a Peruvian-Basque innkeeper, leads him to the site. When they arrive at the ruins they find the words “1902 Agustín Lizarraga is the discoverer of Machu Picchu” scratched on a rock. Lizarraga is a local Peruvian-Basque farmer who had actually located the famous “lost” city nine years previous to Bingham and Arteaga.

Finally, Donald T. Garate states in his paper Basque Names, Nobility, and Ethnicity on the Spanish Frontier, “Aside from the hundreds of soldiers, sailors, government and church officials who were prominent in the exploration, conquest, and settlement of not only Nueva España, but also of South and Central America, there are thousands of Basques to be found in village, mission, and presidio records. For example, Basque names common in Culiacán in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries are Abiles, Aguirre, Albestrain, Amuesqueta, Barrera, Beltrán, Castaños, Chave, Echevarría, Egurrola, Escobar, Espinosa, Gaviria, Ibarra, Ibarrocoa, Iturrioz, Lizarraga, Lízaga, Mendazona, Mendoza, Ochoa, Sala, Oztia, Tapia, Urrea, Zabal, and Zazuta. In Arizpe, Sonora, in the eighteenth century one finds such names as Amentía, Barcena, Bustamante, Mendibel, Moraga, Ochoa, Salazar, Subiarte, Velarde, Velasco, and Zubía. In the Altar Valley some of the prominent Basque names are Gortari, Mendoza, Murrieta, Ochoa, Urias, Urrea, and Unzarraga.

“Although one does not see many Basque names on the far reaches of the frontier at Guevavi and Tumacacorí until after the building of the presidio at Tubac, Basques labeled as españoles or gente de razón suddenly were everywhere when the soldiers arrived. Acuña, Aguirre, Albizu, Algorti, Amuesqueta, Amurrio, Arboló, Arriola, Belderrain, Bezerra, Bustamante, Castillo, Durán, Gamarra, Hurtado, Iguera, Iguerza, Iriogoyen, Iturbe, Lagarra, Larralde, Mendiola, Mendoza, Munguia, Ochoa, Orozco, Pamplona, Salazar, Sarobe, Serrano, Urzanea, and Zuñiga are a sampling.

As Garate continues, “...one cannot look at obvious Basque place names on the frontier and think that some Castilian named them. Everyone is familiar with Nueva Vizcaya and Durango, but consider Arizpe, Ures, Cananea, and Horcasitas, towns along the Sonora and San Miguel River drainages in Sonora. All, with the exception of Ures, have their counterparts in solares and villages in Viscaya. Ures, unless by some coincidence it has a meaning in the Pima or Opata language, refers to water in Basque, a rather obvious connection in a fertile river valley that is populated by hundreds of Basque descendants. Another intriguing name is the ancient royal mining town of Basochuca near Arizpe. Though it would appear to be an Indian name it means finches in Basque.

“Furthermore, Basque place names are certainly not unique to Sonora. Among examples elsewhere consider Jaso, Velarde, Chavarría, and Goycoechea in Chihuahua or the Sierra de Arratia between Culiacán and Durango. There are many other instances, but there is no need to belabor the point. Sailing to New Spain in large numbers, the Basques came early on and left a tremendous legacy in the places they settled.” (Emphasis added.)

As one can tell, even though the Basques were a minority in the New World that certainly did not mean they were unimportant. Though large numbers of Basques came to Nueva España, it was a relatively small number compared to the other Spaniards and Europeans who also arrived. Those Basques who did come made gains far out of proportion to their population. Wherever they settled they had a habit of joining together to form a small but opportunistic minority. In the more than 500 years the Basques have been here, they have maintained and exploited their strong work ethic, cultural and linguistic ties to successfully help explore, colonize and develop the Americas.

Hopefully, this overview has been enjoyable and interesting reading. It is doubtful that it will ever be finished, as it remains a work in progress. It is surprising how, when and where information turns up.

I would again like to express my appreciation to William A. Douglass and Jon Bilbao for their ground-breaking work; to Don Garate for his encouragement, help and generosity towards this work and me; to Joxe Mallea-Olaetxe for his interest, encouragement and help; to retired Bakersfield College instructor Sasha Honig for getting me started on this project more than 35 years ago, for her recent help, and for alerting me to the California Mission Studies Association, and to Professors John Ysursa and Steve Gamboa for their encouragement. Through their efforts and those of the other scholars, historians and authors listed in the reference section, Basque history in the Americas is finally beginning to receive the recognition it deserve.

Text and Translation of the Oldest Known Letter Written in Basque

On February 15, 1537 Bishop of Mexico Juan de Zumárraga wrote a lengthy letter, predominantly in Castilian Spanish, to distant relative Kattalin Ruiz Muntsaratz in Abadiño, Bizkaia. However, some of the letter was written in Basque. He used Basque to inform Kattalin that he, and others, were sending money and other valuable objects to her. The King of Castile sometimes confiscated silver and valuables that came from the colonies and Zumárraga wanted to avoid this occurrence. He dictated most of the letter but at one point he started writing in his own hand. The translation starts at that point.

"Lo de asta aquí señora hermana es de ajena mano lo que se sigue es letra de vuestro hermano fray Juan para con vuestra merced es todo lo que aquí diré en especial lo del bascuençe."
(What has been written up to this point, dear sister, has been written by another’s hand; what follows is in the hand of your brother, Fray Juan. All that I shall write here is for you (alone), especially what is written in Basque.) Note: He used the term “brother” and “sister” in the religious vernacular. They were not siblings.

"Orayn bada ene arrebea douncsua alan yçango çara paradisuan alcarr dacuscula
Now, then, blessed sister of mine, you will be such in paradise where we shall see each other

bidaletan deusudaz An(c)sogarciagaz
I am sending to you with Antso Garcia, (Antso Garcia Larrazabal was Kattalin’s nephew, living in Mexico)

onen yçenean doaçala gogoan gariac plater bj and in his name, the following souvenirs: two plates, jarrabat calderetachu bat taçconteacaz

a pitcher, a small cooking pot and a cup with beads alaba orrendaco orren esposo onec bidaletan deusaz
For that daughter of yours, her husband is sending her

vrre catea eta lau erestun da joyela yru oe onac
a gold chain, four rings, and a gem, (and) the three good beds

lepatrapu galantorj nic liburuacaz eta aulquioc eta oeoc pere bay
That elegant scarf is from me, as well as the books, and those stools, and also those beds

guichica ta ondratuc dogu Munçarasco eseorj eta cure alabaen orj
A little at a time, we shall complete the dowry of Maria Ruyz with other things from here

obatuco ta ordratuc dogu Munçarasco eseorj eta cure alabaen orj
We shall better and honor that house of Muntsaratx and that of your daughter

gollara oc bere onac tira
Those spoons are good ones also guiztioaz asegujx artuco dau çure arima dounsu orrec

(I hope that) your blessed soul will be pleased with all the things aporta baije orra quisa onean vein ese orreetara eta çure podrera

if one day they arrive at that house and to your control in good condition eta ene erechian oba da guarda ditean exilic, orco miiocaytj and in my opinion it is best that this be kept secret because of the gossips around there, çerren mylla bider gueyago dala dan vano esango dabee for they will surely say that it is worth a great deal more than it actually is ynbidiac aurqui esango bearrr eztierean gauçaac

In their envy, they will be quick to say a number of unwarranted things.

durangoco gentea baçaut juizio gujchizcoa da ueyaena
I know the people of Durango; the majority of them have little judgment

casulla eta frontal bi doaz orayn joango dira gueyago
At this time I am sending a pair of chasubles and two antependia; I shall send more later.

orco elexaoen bere gomuta yçango gara Juanac biciçea emayten deuscula
We shall be mindful also of those churches there for as long as the Lord gives us life.

orayn bada ene arrebea fraydeon ostatuorj
Now, then, sister of mine, that hospice of the friars, çure alabaen ese jauxi orri vrgaçi year deusagu ereguj bear dogu

(and) that deteriorated house of your daughter we must sustain, we must rebuild it, çuc eta nic neba arreboac jauxiri dago

you and I, brother and sister; it has fallen into disrepair.
Your daughter is the best foundation for it.

Also, this nephew of ours has become an honorable man;

he earns a great deal of money and I will gladly give them at least the income from the wheat.

It is my intention that they have an income of thirty or forty thousand maravedísesc in order to give shelter to those sinful friars.

Now, you yourself, my sister, must take upon yourself the task of finding the income, and I of sending one.

I believe that this year we shall send a thousand ducats.

We are also sending some now, and it is only for fear that it might be confiscated that we do not send more, and the ships’ captains are secretly carrying three hundred (ducats) each.

After they have acquired all the items they have on the purchase list, whatever is left they should hand over to you;

that is what I am writing to Urti (Abendano) in Seville.

May your pure heart be filled with joy. You are a lady, and alone.

May your heavenly Lord and with their natural (rightful) lady.
After Zumárraga completed the Basque section, he switched back to Spanish:

“Para que se alegre vuestra merced he escripto en el language olvidado e no como yo quisiera come pude.”

(In order to cheer you up, I have written in the forgotten language, not as well as I would have liked, but as well as I could.)

This translation and comments are taken from Buber’s Basque Page on the Internet and is the work of Professor Joxe Mallea-Olaetxe of the University of Nevada, Reno.

Additional Signatures and Rubrics of Basque Dignitaries and Friars in Early Nueva España

(The signatures of Spanish-born individuals are noted for the rubric at the end. This flourish was legally more important than the signature itself because it was difficult to duplicate or forge. Without it, a signature was not authentic. The rubric alone was sometimes all that was needed. Each Spanish boy, early in school, developed a rubric. This practice ended in the mid-19th century.)
